AT ELEVEN o'clock at night, November 12, fire was discovered in the hold of the Spanish steamer Balmes, eastward bound from Galveston. The ship carried 103 passengers and a cargo of cotton. The fire spread rapidly and members of the crew were nearly suffocated by the thick smoke. All stuck to their posts, however. Wireless calls for help were sent out and were picked up by the Cunard liner Pannonia, 180 miles off. The Pannonia left her course, and under forced draft raced to the Balmes' assistance. The rescue ship came up with the imperiled vessel late Thursday night, and on Friday the terrified passengers were transferred to the Pannonia and taken to Hamilton, Bermuda. The officers and crew of the Balmes remained on board their vessel to fight the fire, but not until tugs reached her and placed their powerful pumps aboard was the fire controlled. The Balmes was towed into Hamilton, the fire still burning.

Record Year in Toys

FROM Washington comes the word that this is to be a record year in toy production. Toys to the estimated value of $9,000,000 will have been imported, and our home manufactories have turned out playthings valued at fully $11,000,000. Dolls constitute one-fourth of the total importation, coming mostly from Germany. This country is exporting fewer toys this year, the home demand taking up the bulk of the output. About fifteen hundred new playthings are patented each year, but this year's record of new toys exceeds all previous years. Special supervision is exercised in the United States Patent Office to see to it that patented toys really work. The heavy routine package mail of the Interior Department has been "held up" by order of Secretary Lane for ten days to facilitate the handling of the annual Christmas avalanche.

Filipinos Welcome New Governor

MORE than one hundred thousand persons greeted former Representative Francis Burton Harrison upon his arrival at Manila to take up his new duties as governor-general. A squadron of the Seventh Cavalry escorted Mr. Harrison and family to the Luneta, where he delivered his inaugural address. The welcome given the new governor-general by the Filipinos is reported to the War Department as having been very auspicious. Reports of the enthusiastic welcome accorded the new governor general share news space in the press with disturbing opinions of the policy that may be inaugurated. Because of the removal from office of several able and experienced American officials, and the substitution of prominent natives, the voluntary loss of American control and the consequent establishment of practical independence is looked for. Such a policy is vigorously assailed by ex-President Taft, who is our highest authority on the Philippine question, and by the ex-secretary of the interior in the Philippines, Dean C. Worcester.

Assailing the Cost of Living

INVESTIGATIONS by the American commission to study agriculutre which was sent abroad last summer by the Federal Government, are beginning to bear fruit. The commission, composed of about ninety men, divided into sections which visited the principal European countries. Conditions of agricultural finance, production and distribution were studied. The reports made by the members are being used as the basis for discussions in different States. The four New York State members, by Governor Glynn's suggestion, met in conference with a number of bankers and sociologists on November 18 to formulate a legislative program in the interests of more economical methods of production and marketing of foodstuffs. At the same time society women in New Jersey were gathering for concerted movement for lower prices, under the auspices of the Housewives' League. It was pointed out in the conference with the commission delegates that wasteful methods of milk distribution prevail in American cities, whereas a well-organized system of milk delivery, say in the city of Rochester, could save consumers $500,000 annually. Better business organization among farmers is advocated, and co-operation between consumers and producers through the establishment of municipal markets. The parcel post is also suggested as an effective medium of co-operation. The outcome of the meeting was the appointment of a committee to work out a plan for a marketing union or league, with power to effect such an organization in New York City; also the appointment of a committee to support legislation at Albany for the establishment of land mortgage banks.

Trouble Ahead for Grafters

WITH fine courage District Attorney Whitman has entered the political jungle after big game, and promises to follow every trail that he believes will lead him to the lair of a grafter. Howls of fear and of threatening have been heard on every side, and it is generally expected that the results of the hunt will be one of the most valuable collections of political skins ever brought out of this particular hunting ground. This New York investigation of the Tammany "bagmen" who have levied on contractors throughout the State for political and other purposes is disclosing some remarkable results. It is stated that $5,000,000 was gathered in from at least three hundred highway and canal contractors in the State, the money being collected in Albany. A large number of witnesses have been subpœnaed and sensational disclosures are expected, which will make the case the biggest boodle inquest on record.

Delay in Currency Reform

THERE is a prospect that currency legislation may be delayed until the winter session of Congress begins. This is indicated by the report made in the Senate by Senator Owen, which practically conceded that it was unprobable that any action would be taken by the special session. Consequently it seems doubtful whether any measure can be passed before next year.

Katsura's Mammoth Brain

RECENT papers contained accounts of the dissection of th brain of Prince Katsura of Japan, who died October 10 o cancer. President Wilson sent a wreath at that time throug the American ambassador, Mr. Guthrie. The examination wa in accordance with the prince's expressed wish, and was conducted as a Japa nese ceremony. The spirit of the departed prince was addressed by the sur geon in charge in reminder that this was being done by the dead man's wis in the interests of science. After the examination the surgeon expressed gratitude to the spirit of the prince, and the widow, Princess Katsura, wh had bravely taken part in the ceremony, uttered a brief prayer to her hus band's spirit.

The brain of the distinguished Japanese statesman was found to weig slightly more than 1,600 grams, or 56.4 ounces avoirdupois; that of the averag man is 1,367 grams.

"PANTS'" FIRST CHRISTMAS

BY CLYDE J. APPLEGATE

WHILE the six men who were on duty at the wireless telegraph station at Port Safety, twenty-six miles east of Nome, Alaska, were at work near the edge of a oon one fall day not many years ago, one of them d a black speck moving across the ice toward t shore.

Say, Ap, look out there! Do you see anything?" aking a long look I replied that I did. I got fieldglass, and was able to make out two persons, an and a woman, both heavily laden with packs. y were coming straight for the station over the

It was sufficient to hold them as long as they e above shallow water, but we knew it would not l when they struck the swift nnel, near our side of the oon.

On they came, almost bent double the weight of the packs. We l been in Alaska only two nths, and were about to witness first tragedy there. The man s about ten feet in advance of woman. Suddenly, as they ched the channel we saw the ice a little. Then the man stopped, ked up, started to turn back, but vas too late. The ice parted and went down. He disappeared ler the ice, and was whisked ay by the strong outgoing tide. second later the woman began to k. Before she disappeared she ew a bundle from her, which slid ite a distance from the break in ice. Then she too was gone.

We were startled to hear a cry uing from the bundle on the ice. 'Steady, boys," I shouted. "That's live youngster! Get a rope, uble time! Here, Foxy, get some of ose boards, the twelve-footers!"

With a rope tied to my ankle, I flat on a board, and was gingerly shed out over the cracking ice th other boards until I grasped e bundle. The ice sank considerly as the boys pulled us back, but ld until we reached the shore.

I carried the bundle to the staon, and after unwrapping many eces of old clothing, found a girl by, about three years old. Her ir was light, and because her attle was in a foreign tongue, we l concluded that she was a Swede. here was not a mark or sign about e child that could help to identify r. At last she cried herself to ep, and with a very heavy heart I threw myself a chair to rehearse the strange events of the past our.

We had to keep the child at least until the freezg of the trail would enable the quartermaster to ach us. That would be about the first part of ecember and it was now only October. I finally gged up a pair of overalls for her, and so we all me to call her "Pants."

From the first day of her stay with us the absence profanity and quarreling was marked. No rules ere laid down, but each one seemed to take it upon imself to refrain. We had great times trying to muse her. She had six instructors, and at almost ny hour of the day one of them could be found trying to teach her some English words. When the message finally came that our supplies would arrive in a few days, we had to make up our minds whether we would let Pants go back with the team or keep her with us. We all decided that we could not get along without her. And I sent in an order for some new overalls, not forgetting to make requisition for candy, popcorn and maple syrup.

As Christmas drew near we set out secretly to make her some playthings. Pants seemed to know that something was in the air, but we kept her in ignorance, and as there were several Eskimo families with children close by, her time was well taken up. Before the big snow came, Bowe and Nava took the dogs and went back to the foothills, where they secured a good-sized cedar tree. This was placed in the large storehouse, where we intended that Pants should have her first Christmas, with her little Eskimo playmates. Wires were run across to the building from the wireless plant and the tree was trimmed with electric lights. Cookies were made and dangled all over it, mosquito netting was made into various shapes and filled with candies. There were popcorn balls as big as your head, and as the toys were completed they, too, were placed upon the tree. It was comical in the extreme to see the big, husky soldiers sitting on the floor stringing popcorn, yards and yards of it, always singing or whistling. On Christmas Eve the engine which generated the electricity was started, the current turned on, and the tree was transformed into a cluster of lights. Then I called Pants. In the meantime Grover had rounded up all the Eskimos in the place and they were outside the door, waiting. Foxy opened it, and in they piled, mothers, fathers and children. Open-mouthed they stood and stared, spellbound. When Pants entered, like a little queen, she stopped, gripped my hand more tightly, shook it, then pulled down my head, threw both arms around my neck and kissed me. A big lump in my throat tried to choke me, and I was not ashamed of the tears that ran down my face. I was surprised to see five other huskies looking just about as I did. But we were a happy crowd.

"WE ALL DECIDED THAT WE COULD NOT GET ALONG WITHOUT HER"

Suddenly there was a roar outside, bells jingled, dogs barked, and in came old Santa, with a bound and a yell. Pants jumped up and down in great excitement, but the Eskimos got restless, and all bunched into one corner of the room, expecting to be slaughtered. They had never seen anything like this. But gradually, as Santa began to give out the presents, candy and toys galore, our strange company warmed up! There were dolls, real dolls, right from Nome, candies, a circus tent and little wagons with animals which we had made during the busy weeks, a drum, a sledge—indeed, it would be hard to name the output of those boys. But Pants's delight fully repaid all the hours of work we had put in for her sake.

About the first of January two of the boys got permission to go to Nome for a few days. Before they started we made out a list of things that were wanted. I said to our baby, "What does Pants want?" The answer was just one word, but it broke us all up:

"Mim!"

That was her name for mother. She loved us all truly but could not stifle the longing for a mother's love and care. When the boys returned from Nome they brought me a guitar as a present. When it was tuned up and I ran over the chords, Pants looked at me in astonishment. After that I had to play for her and sing her to sleep every night. The music seemed to take some of the hungry look out of her eyes and temporarily to fill the mother's place. But I could not forget that one request, "Mim."

In the spring I tried unsuccessfully to find her a good home. So matters remained until August, when orders came that I was to be sent to Valdez in October. A family in Nome had heard about Pants. In fact, every one who traveled the trail between Nome and Soloman knew her. This family had lost a girl a little younger, but I persuaded them to take our little waif. It was a hard parting, and I never like to think about it.

As I write this, I live it all over again—that winter and that Christmas with the little snow-baby, who helped six rough soldiers to be good.

"JESUS IS HERE!"

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

The Author of "In His Steps," Etc., Etc.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

Heralded by a marvelous light in the sky, which was seen by many, Jesus has come to Raymond, the scene of the story In His Steps. Popular excitement runs high, and extends throughout the country, skepticism being uppermost. Jasper Carter, editor of the Raymond Gazette, fails in an astonishing way to get either a sensational story or a photograph, as do also the other newspaper men, who come from other cities. Carter's star reporter, Barnes, accepts the reality of Jesus, and has a serious break with his employer. Jesus calls to see the editor, and leaves with him a remarkable manuscript. Jesus comforts Mrs. Page, whose little daughter dies, but does not bring the child back to life. He addresses an audience in First Church, an audience at the State university and again a great audience at the church. Virginia Page and Mr. Stanton, assistant to Mr. Maxwell, the pastor of First Church, have been strongly attracted to each other. In a riot of the crowd near the church Stanton protects Virginia from harm. Jesus appears on the church steps and quiets the mob.

CHAPTER VI—Continued

IN THE struggle of the past minutes Stanton and Virginia had been flung up within a few feet of Him.

He looked out over the multitude and then smiled. Then he looked at Virginia and Stanton, and they felt in an instant that all love's mystery, all their seemingly mutual appeal to each other, so brief in time but so deep and eternal, were fully comprehended and approved by him.

And he turned, and with the child still in his arms, the mother following, Stanton and Virginia, Maxwell and a group of ministers, all bearing marks on their persons of the frightful scene through which they had passed, walked along to Maxwell's house through an opening quietly made for them by the people. Men were dazed and smitten into silence. Never in all the experiences of their lives had they witnessed any such event. And it was only when Jesus had disappeared that the people began to disperse after seeing that those who were seriously injured had been properly cared for.

In all that wild madness, no one had been killed. Men were asking themselves as they went back to their business or their homes, speaking in whispers, whether miraculous power had been exerted that day. Hearts beat fast at the memory of what they had seen and heard. And the excitement of the press representatives mounted every moment with increasing volume. What manner of person was this?

Stanton had parted from Virginia at Dr. West's. The doctor had remained at the scene of the mob to be of service to those who were injured. As Stanton, bloody, with torn clothing, a deep gash across his cheek, turned to go into the doctor's doorway, he smiled at the sight he imagined of himself.

Virginia was almost as "presentable." Her hat had been torn off and lost. Her hair was all over her face and shoulders. Her clothing was rent, and some one in the mad whirl of arms and hands had smeared her face with a wide streak of dirt.

They looked seriously at each other a moment and then laughed. Out of the fulness of their hearts

COMMONEST SIN--YET UNCONFESSED

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

A SLIVER in the finger causes pain until it is removed. There was a sliver in the body politic of Israel. It was in the form of a tongue of gold and a richly embroidered Babylonish garment. Achan had possessed himself of these things when Jericho was overthrown. They were a part of the "spoil" which God had said must be destroyed. This command was given for the good of Israel, to save them from becoming a savage, plundering and marauding mob as they marched through the land of Canaan to possess it. But Achan disobeyed God's command by carrying his loot into his tent surreptitiously and digging a hole there and burying it. No one knew it but God! But at once sorrow and defeat came upon the army of Israel. When they were sent by Joshua to capture Ai, a small mountain town, the garrison came out and attacked them, and Israel fled as cowards, not striking a single blow, and thirty-six of their number were killed.

Individual covetousness had halted the victorious onward march of God's army. All Israel recognized that God had not gone with them up to Ai. Joshua was dismayed and fell upon his face before the Ark in the tabernacle, where the light of God shone between the cherubim. All day, until the evening, he bowed before God and prayed; the elders of Israel did so too. They prayed that God would tell them why he had kept back his help at Ai. And God answered: "Israel hath sinned. . . . They have even taken of the devoted thing [devoted to destruction] . . . I will not be with you any more except ye destroy the devoted thing from among you."

God did not name the man who had taken the tongue of gold and the Babylonish garment, but God told Joshua how he could find out; it was to search through all the people of Israel. That Joshua did, and found out that it was Achan. Read Joshua 7: 16-22. Then Achan confessed what he had done, and Joshua sent soldiers to dig up the things Achan had buried. They were to be put into a pile with Achan's tent and everything he owned to be burned. Read in the Bible the last four verses of the seventh chapter of Joshua and note how it all ended with Achan. Read also the eighth chapter of Joshua about what happened at the second attack on Ai by the army of Israel when God went with them. God gave them a great victory. Their first defeat was providential interposition. God was teaching a nation which was to teach the world, and he sought to warn them at the very beginning of the nation's history that if they allowed covetousness or any form of selfishness to cause defiance to God, it would also bring injury to the family and the nation.

Jesus in his ministry continued the warnings against covetousness: no sin was condemned so often and so severely by him as covetousness and hypocrisy, which go together. For covetousness crowds God out of his throne in the heart. The apostle Paul calls it "idolatry." And surely, one who practices idolatry and professes godliness is a hypocrite. Some merchants from Christian lands and travelers, too, many of them members of churches, have proved a great hindrance to foreign missions. The idolatry of the heathen does not hurt so much as the "covetousness, which is idolatry in the heart," putting love of gold and garments above loving obedience to God. Not alone the covetousness of those who rob and destroy the "child races" with the white man's rum and opium, but also the slightly more respectable covetousness that cheats without killing by getting valuable goods in return for childish trinkets, such as glass beads and red calico, or valuable estates, such as Arlington, in exchange with the Indians for two hogsheads of tobacco.

A protest has recently been made by the Conference of the Protestant Churches in the New Hebrides Islands (where the beloved Dr. Paton labored for nearly fifty years). They prepared a memorial which began: "We are of the opinion that a time has come when we can no longer refrain from calling the attention of the people of the British Empire to the deplorable condition of things existing in this group of islands" (forty or more). Grievances are cited, of which the following is a sample: A boy laborer was left in charge of a ship at Vila Harbor for a week without food. To keep from starving he begged some rice from a local storekeeper, who sent a bill to his employer. He responded to the bill by throwing a bottle at the head of the boy, which broke and inflicted dangerous cuts on his head, and covered him with blood. He had to be sent to the hospital, and after his recovery his case was presented to the court, but no prosecution followed. Such cruelty was grounded in covetousness—money was all the employer cared for. Another instance quoted: A man found twelve natives sitting on the shore and asked them what they were doing. They replied they were seeking work. He induced them to go on board his ship, and they were brought to Vila Harbor and engaged to a settler, for whom they worked several months, when they were engaged by another man; at the end of a year they were returned to their homes without having any pay for their work or any compensation for their suffering, but, of course, their employers had been enriched by their labors. Instances were cited in the conference memorial of lands being seized and used by foreigners, which had from time immemorial been the property of natives. The document referred to noted a great many instances of outrageous dealing. Who can measure the disastrous effect on the progress of Christian missions when those who trade and those who preach are of the same nationality? The conference made the appeal to the people in all parts of the British Empire, "believing that once the true state of affairs is fully realized, it will no longer be tolerated." If covetousness cannot be taken out of the hearts of the traders—which is doubtful—they must be held in leash by law.

We all know that covetousness is very common in our land. We see it in others, but have we seen it in ourselves? During all the history of the world, confession of this very common sin is so uncommon that probably a men's class of five hundred could not recall in all their lives that they had ever heard five people who had even confessed that they were selfish, much less stingy or covetous. Here now is one such case: A miserly church member who, like Jacob, was really struggling to serve God against a selfish nature one day discovered himself taking off the smallest bill from a great roll in his pocket to put in the missionary collection as his annual contribution for the conversion of the world. The meanness of such a gift confronted him like a soiled face in a mirror, and he threw the whole roll of bills into the collection basket, saying to himself: "Now squirm, old nature."

The only way to drive out this unworthy lov money is to learn love for man through love to (They are really richer in all the best things of who do not forget "the other fellow," and f youth are "scouts," not scouting for a chance fight, but to do a good turn to somebody every in His name.

There are many Achans to-day, while in Josh time we are told of only one, and they are all h ing back the onward march of God's great army the church. The covetous church member, i father, hinders the conversion of his family; if employer, of his employees. If the covetous chu member is an employee, he not only bars the way God for his fellow workmen, but sometimes confi his employer in distrust of Christianity. In all these cases meanness in everyday relations wh is based on gain crops out and destroys confide The father is not always the Christian gentlem because he is selfish about his own comfort, sometimes in his haste to get rich he will not t time to read the Bible and pray with his fam He "must be at the office in time." The man w employs others is sometimes so eager to pile riches that he entirely overlooks those who working with him. Possibly it has never ente his mind that there should be more equal sharing earnings as well as in labor. Some large firms a manufacturing plants have worked out noble pla in this direction. As to employees, their coveto ness sometimes takes the form of seeing how lit they can render in exchange for the wages th receive. If their masters are hard with them th "get even" by doing less, and so diminish the su cess of the employer's business.

When Jesus was preaching the Sermon on t Mount, he said: "Lay not up for yourselves trea ures upon earth, . . . but lay up for yourselv treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor ru doth corrupt, and where thieves do not bre through nor steal." Matt. 6: 19, 20. Also in t Sermon on the Mount he said: "Ye can not ser God and mammon." Matt. 6: 24. When Jesus s in the boat and taught the waiting people on t land, he said: "He that received seed among t thorns is he that heareth the word; and the care this world and the deceitfulness of riches choke th word, and he becometh unfruitful." Matt. 13: 2 When Jesus was giving heart-to-heart talks to h apostles he said: "What is a man profited if he sha gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Mat 16: 26.

Jesus himself was a living example of how to pu away all covetousness. He stripped himself no alone of the glory which he had in heaven with h Father, but he lived in such a lowly fashion tha even the birds and the foxes were better housed tha he, for they had nests and holes, but he had no where to lay his head. Luke 9: 58.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—CHRISTMAS IS NEAR at hand, and we are asked by an old subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to make some suggestions about what kind of Christmas presents should be given to Sunday school scholars, and whether or not it is desirable to give special prizes at Christmas for faithful attendance during the year. We would certainly say "no" to this last proposition. Let us glorify or honor only one Name—the name of Christ—at Christmas time. A Christmas tree always interests everybody, young and old, and now that it is possible to use electric lights—very tiny ones—Christmas trees are safer than they used to be. Use for decorations such things as are the least inflammable, such as oranges and apples, brightly colored glass balls, and strings of popcorn which the children will like to make. Use no cotton or tissue paper, for they invite fire. We would advise putting no presents on the tree excepting the little trifles intended for the very smallest children. Let them be placed around the tree, thus adding to its beauty. The practice of giving boxes of Christmas candy to all members of the school is quite common. Unless it is a mission school the boys and girls generally get all the candy they need and more too in their homes. Let us consider then if it would not be wiser to give some little token, a special card from the pastor or superintendent.

Certainly every child who is expecting to receive a gift should bring a gift for the poor. It might be well to have contributions for the pound table brought in two or three days before Christmas, or on the Sabbath before Christmas, so that there might be plenty of material for Christmas baskets to be made up for the poor. We believe there should be an early service of the Sunday school on Christmas morning—as soon as it is light—no matter on what day Christmas comes. The service should be brief—several carols sung, the Christmas story read from the Bible—no long speeches—no speeches at all; an earnest prayer for God's blessing, and an exchange of glad Christmas greetings, and then all go home to breakfast!

—A NUMBER OF readers have questioned the statement made recently as to the number of people led out of Egypt by Moses. Ex. 12: 37 puts the number at "about six hundred thousand on foot that were men, beside children." This has been generally accepted as it stands, by Bible students, but a new authority, Dr. Franklin E. Hoskins, suggests another interpretation of the word translated "thousand." In his book, From the Nile to Nebo, published by the Sunday School Times Company, he makes the following four points: 1. That to lead any number through the Peninsula of Sinai under the circumstances of the Exodus was one of the greatest undertakings of human history. 2. That the word alof, translated "thousands," should be "families." See margin of Num. 1: 16, Revised Version. Not families as we know them, as father, mother and children of one household, but rather an aggregate of kinsfolk. 3. That in the two numberings of the people, in Num. 1 and 6, we should read families instead of thousands, 598 families in the first census and 596 families in the second census, while those able to go forth to war were named by hundreds—amounting to 5,550 in the first census, and 5,730 in the second census. In Ex. 12: 37, apparently the oldest account of the Exodus, 600 thousands (families) are mentioned. 4. That as the average is one in every fourteen of the population of the seven modern nations "able to go forth to war" (Austria, France, Germany, Russia, Italy and Great Britain) and believing that social conditions and human nature have not varied much throughout the ages, it is perfectly justifiable to make use of this modern average in dealing with Bible figures concerning the children of Israel; therefore taking the 5,550 able bodied men of the first census and multiplying these figures by fourteen we get 77,700, which increased by the Levites, gives us a total of 100,000 souls.

—ONE TEACHER asks where she can get Bible pictures for her primary class. We think this question has been answered before, but we will repeat: The Perry or Brown pictures, costing one penny each, of cabinet size, may be ordered through any Sunday school publishing house in New York, Boston, Chicago or Philadelphia. The large Bible picture roll published by Harris & Jones, Providence, R. I., is best of all to show to the whole school or class.

—ANOTHER TEACHER wishes to know where outfits for object teaching can be secured. Such things as sandboards, tents and models of sheepfolds and houses can be made by the teachers themselves; other things, such as sheep, trees, etc., can be found in toy stores. These things should be kept carefully in a cabinet in the classroom, and they will prove useful many times.

Questions and Answers

One in Doubt, Boston, Mass. A man years ago stole much money from different employers, and also from partners in business, and even from the government, and in such a way that no one knew it. Now he repents and forsakes his sin; he is truly converted, and is a changed man. He wishes he could restore every cent, yet does not know how much he took from them. He has lost every penny, is broken in health and trying honestly to support his family on small pay. Now, is it necessary for his complete salvation to write and confess something which those he had defrauded never knew, for he is not even able to pay the fare to go and see them? Besides, he would be taken back and put in prison and would thus have to desert his family, who would be scattered and disgraced.

Your case is a very sad one. It would be well to take counsel with your pastor. God does not expect us to accomplish the impossible; but we should try, as far as we can, to make amends for the past by living an upright and honorable life henceforth, and by taking the first opportunity that presents itself to make restitution. In your case, the latter, at present, is unfortunately impossible; but if you put your life and your future in God's hands, in the spirit of true repentance, a way may be opened to you which will bring peace to your soul. Remember, Christ saves "to the uttermost." You cannot purchase salvation through any merit of your own, or by any act you may do; it comes to you as a free gift. Confession is good for the soul—not confession in the ear of a priest, but to the brethren who will help you, and you should make your repentance known to those you have defrauded. As a purely worldly practical proposition, you will probably discover that the statutes of limitation have outlawed some of your offenses. Under such circumstances, most men will readily forgive. But remember, even that does not relieve you from the moral duty to make restitution, where possible. With regard to the dealings with the government, there is in the Treasury Department a fund which is known as the "conscience fund," to which you can send whatever you can spare.

Jos. F. R., Blue Rapids, Kan., writes: "I would like to say to readers through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that I am afraid we are as a nation responsible to a great degree for Rome's growth in this country by gross neglect of the right training of our children. Observing the gradual decline in Protestant church attendance and membership, and a general pursuit of only pleasure and amusement at the expense of spiritual life, and neglect in teaching past history to the new generation, we cannot but see that we will some day reap bitter results."

E. L. B., Emporia, Kan. While there are passages in the Old Testament that point to the belief in immortality (as for instance the well-known passage in Job 19: 26, which is more correctly rendered in the Revised Version: "Yet without my flesh shall I see God," it was not until Jesus gave his Gospel that the clearly defined teaching of eternal life was given to the world. Paul stated this clearly in his famous passage in II Tim. 1: 10, wherein he said that Jesus Christ had "brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel."

A. C. M., Davidson, Tenn. The Greek Church, which is the leading branch of the Oriental or Eastern Churches, recognizes the infallible authority of the first seven councils, rejects papal supremacy and doctrinal authority, holds the seven sacraments as the Roman Church does, baptizes by trine immersion, administers communion even to children, forbids the use of graven images except the cross, includes the Bible and the traditions of the church in the rule of faith and preaches homilies rather than sermons.

A. L. M., Brooklyn, N. Y. That the negro race, even before its contact with the whites, had a civilization of its own, is attested in many ways. Mungo Park long ago described the city of Sego, capital of Bambarra on the Niger River, as having a crowded population, and "the cultivated state of the surrounding country forming altogether a prospect of civilization which I little expected to find in the bosom of Africa." The Zulus and certain other tribes were found by early travelers to have ancient and well-defined customs and laws of their own; to be moral, truthful and virtuous, though fierce and warlike to their enemies. Some tribes, like the Vei of West Africa, had well constructed languages. Dr. Johnston, who traveled across Africa many years ago, found one monarch, Lewanika, who claimed descent from Solomon and who had his court and his legal advisers, and who sat daily in public to administer justice in all cases brought before him. It is true, there were many tribes in darkest ignorance and savagism, but since the introduction of the Gospel and secular education, most of the tribes have shown wonderful advancement and susceptibility to the training of civilization. It should not be forgotten that Africa's emancipation from heathen darkness properly began only in the middle of the last century. See answer to another correspondent regarding the aboriginal races of North America.

M. C., Bridgeport, Conn. 1. The passage in Zech. 8: 23 is interpreted as referring to a future day when the Gentiles would eagerly seek to share the religious privileges of the Jew. The skirt which is described in Num. 15: 38 and Deut. 22: 12 was a distinctive racial and religious badge. "God is with you" is an acknowledgment of the effect produced on the nations on witnessing the deliverance of the Jews in various great historical crises. 2. Hammurabi (from Ammu and rabi, meaning the "great god") was the sixth king of the first dynasty of Babylon. Assyriologists identify him with the Amraphel of Gen. 14, although some dispute the identification. The date of his reign is also a matter of question, some placing it as early as 2340 B.C., and others as late as 1900 B.C. Moses is supposed to have been born about 1738 B.C.

D. F. S. Judas was of the tribe of Judah, from Kerioth, while the rest of the twelve belonged to Galilee. (See Acts 2: 7.) As to his life before the appearance of the name among those of the apostles, nothing is known. He was probably first drawn by the preaching of John the Baptist and afterwards led to join the apostolic company, though with what motive or expectation can only be judged from his later career.

C. S. T., Plain City, Ohio. In the passage in Habakkuk describing fishing and the use of nets, the word is mikmereth, and in a parallel passage in Isa. 19: 8 it is mikmoreth. A seine or fishing-net, which is used as a drag to enclose the fish, is meant. These drag-nets encircle the fish and are then drawn along, either by boat or by fishermen pulling the ropes as they wade inshore. Such nets are in use today. We know nothing of the flue-net, but drag-nets may in some cases probably be called "fine" nets, having reference to the size of the mesh.

W. W. D., Miami, Fla. The passage in 1 Peter 3: 19 has been interpreted by commentators as referring to the antediluvians, to whom the Spirit of Christ, through Noah, preached before the flood. Noah preached to their ears and senses, but Christ to their spiritual natures. Others hold that this passage refers to the time when Christ descended into hell after his crucifixion, and that at that time he preached to those there confined.

M. S., New York. The passage to which you refer will be found in I Thess. 4: 17. Read the whole chapter. Read also Rev. 20: 5.

A. A. B., Van Horne, Iowa. There is no reason to suppose that the destruction at the flood included the denizens of the deep. (See Gen. 6: 7-13.)

F. B., Balston Spa, N. Y. 1. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has many times expressed its attitude on card-playing and dancing. 2. We have no information on the subject of your second question. 3. The number of species existing at the time of the flood is a matter of speculation. Nothing definite can be stated on this subject, but it is not improbable that it was as varied as it is to-day.

M. M., Yonkers, N. Y. 1. Isaac is believed to have been born at Gerar, in Southern Palestine, a region of great fertility and supposed to be near the district now known as Wady Seriah. His birth probably occurred about B.C. 2063. 2. Rebekah's birthplace is not stated, but she is first introduced in the Scripture narrative during the visit of Eliezer to Padanaram, which is supposed to have been her native place. She was born about B.C. 2023 (estimated). 3. We know of no picture of the covenant with Abraham.

"JESUS IS HERE!"

they laughed, not at each other, but together. If the sidewalk had not been crowded with people, what would they have said?

"I cannot thank you here," Virginia had said hurriedly. "What do people say when their lives are saved?"

"I do not know," Stanton had said in his deep, strong voice, softened to a whisper that lingered in Virginia's heart. "I wish I did. For you have given me life to-day."

That night Mr. Maxwell's house was besieged by representatives of the press. They clamored with increasing emphasis for admission. They all wanted to see this person calling himself Jesus and get additions to their already exciting accounts of the day's happenings.

Henry Maxwell had refused admission to every one. At nine o'clock that evening the noise of the crowd and its demands became so insistent that Maxwell unlocked the front door and stepped out.

The newspaper men gathered up as close as they could get. He urged the men to leave the house, which they finally in goodnatured unanimity agreed to do. As they left the door, Mr. Maxwell went back inside, while the newspaper men scattered to their hotel rooms, deeply impressed with what they had seen and heard.

At ten o'clock that night Henry Maxwell, up in his study above the guest-room where Jesus lay asleep, was summoned by the telephone. It was Stanton calling him.

"I cannot sleep. And I felt certain you must be awake. I want to inquire about—Him."

"He is fast asleep."

"How wonderful! What a stupendous series of events!"

"Yes. How little we could have dreamed it!"

"Was the little girl that he carried given her sight?"

A pause. Then—

"No. He gave her back to her mother, saying words I did not catch. And she went away apparently satisfied."

Another pause. Then Stanton's voice: "That cry to the mob! Was it not wonderful?"

"Yea. Indescribable. You were not seriously hurt?"

"No. A blow on my cheek."

"Miss Page took all bravely?"

"Yes. No one could have been braver."

Then Maxwell again: "I will tell you, Stanton, what I have told no one yet. He is going away to-morrow."

"Going away?"

"To New York. To Washington."

"But he has only just begun—"

"But do you realize Raymond is only one small place? He is eager to see the great multitudes and carry his great message elsewhere. Consider our blessing to have seen him even once."

"Yes. But how can we live without him?"

"He is with us always. Stanton, he said he wants to see you—and—Virginia—before he goes."

A silence. Then from Stanton: "He is my Master, my Lord and my God. I bless the day I saw his wondrous Light."

Before Mr. Maxwell went to bed, he gently opened the guest-room door. The light was low in the hall, but a little of it entered the room.

The Guest was asleep, soundly. He breathed like a happy, healthy child. What wondrous scenes awaited him in the great surging centers of men as he set his face from Raymond! Who could tell?

Mr. Maxwell closed the door, and in his own room, kneeling, he breathed a prayer, foreseeing in a waking vision some of the tremendous scenes through which his Master would soon pass. And as he fell asleep there ran again and again through his heart as he thought of the Figure asleep in his own house: "Jesus is here! Jesus is here!"

CHAPTER VII

IT WAS a week after the great conference in the First Church at Raymond. Virginia had just come over to see Rachel, and as Rachel came into the sitting-room with her boy Frank, she exclaimed:

"What have you been doing to grow so young and handsome? Stand right there, Virginia. What's the secret?"

Virginia stood still, facing her friend. Before her conversion to Christian discipleship she had used her wealth and social influence simply for pleasure. Now, for the years she had dedicated herself to the service of her Master, none of her beauty had been lessened. But it had about it a more subtle loveliness and grace. And to-day, as she came in, she was so radiant, so abundant in the splendor of her Christian womanhood, that her friend could not refrain from comment. Virginia stood there in silence. There was a smile on her lips so gracious, so full of winsome life, that it was irresistible. The little boy Frank ran up to her.

"Kiss me, Auntie Virginia," he said.

"Me too!" cried Rachel. She ran into Virginia's arms and the two friends laughed as the boy reached up his arms between them.

"I have come to tell you, dear. You shall be the first to know." And in few words she told her heart's secret.

"What! You! Virginia! Oh, I am so glad! And oh, how I shall enjoy having you for my minister's wife!"

"Rachel! How do you know? Besides, I shall not be your minister's wife. Only—"

"Only the 'assistant' minister's wife. But do you think I have been blind, or that a happy married woman like myself cannot see what has been going on when her dearest friend was concerned? Why, the very first night Mr. Stanton saw you he was attracted to you."

"That is what he tells me," Virginia exclaimed. "And it helps us both a little to excuse the seemingly absurdly brief time we have known each other. Just think! Less than two weeks."

"But you are neither of you children, you know," said Rachel slyly. "Let's see. How old are you, Virginia?"

"I am thirty-four," said Virginia, smiling. "And Mr. Stanton is forty. So of course we, as you say, are not children."

"Do you call him Mr. Stanton?"

"I meant to have said"—Virginia paused shyly, almost as if Richard were a man acquaintance—"to have said—'Richard.'"

"That sounds better to me. How delightful!" And Rachel clasped her again. "God has been good to you, Virginia, in giving you the love of a real man."

"I know in my heart he has. For Richard saved my life there out in front of the church. And I believe, dear, I learned fully what he meant to me that day. And another thing I have not told you: the next day, the day Jesus went away, he talked with us and seemed to crown our love with the one great crown it needed."

Rachel was silent, looking at Virginia with deepest interest.

Virginia's face, happy, glowing with her newly found joy, was now wet with tears.

"Jesus spoke to us with a comfort and a joy we do not know how to express or explain. He had seen from the first time he met us how necessary we were to each other. And then Richard told him that on the day of the riot, in the very midst of its confusion, or just as it was marvelously quieting under the astonishing command of Jesus, he knew, just as if Jesus had spoken, that he approved and commended and blessed our love for each other. Oh, we shall always carry with us all our lives his gracious benediction. Think of it, Rachel! We—Richard and I—have actually taken the hand of Jesus in the flesh and he himself in person has actually blessed our love with his spoken word and his gracious smile. It does not seem possible."

"All of that astounding week seems impossible," said Rachel gravely. "But we know how real it has all been. I never could have borne the death of Eloise if Jesus had not been here."

Rachel's tears fell, but they were not bitter, only the natural human tears of mother affection.

"Do you feel at any time as if Jesus ought to have brought her to life?"

"No. Not now. I have the greatest peace, Virginia, whenever I think of Eloise. Jesus gave me that peace."

There was a loving silence between the two friends while Virginia held Rachel's hand and caressed it. Then Rachel said brightly:

"Have you told Mr. Maxwell?"

"No, but Richard is going to tell him to-day. We wanted to keep it to ourselves a while."

"Selfish creatures! Keeping it to yourselves at least a week! O Virginia, I did not think you were so selfish!"

Virginia laughed again—a laugh that revealed her intense happiness.

"I am not going to apologize for the suddenness of it. I have no doubt people will be surprised. They will say it is not like me."

"Well, it has not been like anything you have ever done yet. But don't you imagine any one will be critical. I have not been so happy since Rollin, with my help, asked me to marry him. But—" and her face grew happily thoughtful—"what a blessing greater than mine or any friend's, dear Virginia, is the blessing He gave you both."

"Yes," Virginia said softly, her face glowing, her eyes looking afar. "Yes. We shall carry that gracious blessing of his all our lives. Thank God! Thank God!"

"Do you think we shall ever see him again?"

"Not here in Raymond. He must go to as many other places as he can."

"Where will he go first?"

"To New York. Then to Washington. Then—he did not know himself. But he bade us farewell, as if we should not see him again here. I shall never forget his last words, 'Beloved, we shall all meet in the Father's house.'"

"It is what he said to Rollin and me at the grave that day. Virginia, how wonderful that we have seen and talked with Jesus!"

"And that he has loved us and told us so. Oh, I am so happy! We want to serve him all our lives and give our lives completely to him."

After a silence, Virginia rose to go, and Rachel asked: "When will you be married?"

"Very soon. We see no reason for waiting long."

"No. You have waited so long all these years it would be too bad to wait any longer!"

Virginia, smiling, kissed Rachel and little Frank, and went away.

The boy turned to his mother and said: "Mamma, what makes Auntie Virgie so beautiful to-day?"

"Love, just love. It is the great beautifier of life."

"Is that what makes you so beautiful?"

"Bless you, my son, it must be," said Rachel as she clasped the boy to her heart and thought of Eloise and Rollin.

At about the same time in the day that Virginia was "confessing" to

Delicious Plum Pudding Anyone Can Eat

This pudding made with Crisco is delicious and wholesome, even when served cold.

Suet pudding must be eaten "piping hot" to taste best, because suet is a hard fat, requiring great heat to become thoroughly melted. It hardens when cold, and so is unpalatable and hard to digest.

But Crisco Plum Pudding may be served cold or hot with cold or hot sauce. It remains fresh indefinitely. Clip this recipe and pin on the kitchen wall for further reference.

CRISCO

½ cupful seeded raisins
½ cupful chopped candied citron peel
1 cupful currants
½ cupful chopped preserved ginger

"JESUS IS HERE!"

Rachel, Stanton was with Mr. Maxwell in his study at his house.

They had been reviewing that wonderful week which would remain in their personal history as the most astonishing experience they would ever know on earth.

"What has been left as a result of His short stay with us?" Stanton was saying.

"The result? Stanton, it is simply overwhelming. I can understand now why it was not necessary for Jesus to live a long period of years on the earth in order to leave a deathless influence. Do you realize what courage and power the visit of Jesus put into the ministers? All over town yesterday every one was talking about the wonderful sermons heard on Sunday. People said there was nothing like it in all church history in Raymond."

"I'm sure," Stanton said warmly. "We had a wonderful sermon in our church. Mr. Maxwell, I want to say I never heard such a powerful sermon in all my life as you preached day before yesterday."

Mr. Maxwell's eyes glistened. He had already fallen in love with his great-hearted assistant, and his words of praise pleased him greatly.

"Thank you, Stanton, thank you. But what man could help preaching, after all we have seen and heard? The coming of Jesus and his message put such heart and hope into the church and into all Christian discipleship that it is not possible to measure its value. It will all lead shortly to a real and powerful union of the denominations in Raymond and all over the country. And that will mean a new and wonderful chapter in Christianity."

"But—how can we live without him, Mr. Maxwell? In the short week he was with us—how we all learned to love him! I would give anything right now to see and hear him. What will befall him in New York and Washington? How will he be received there?"

It is impossible for us to say. I cannot help thinking of the quiet, unconcerned way in which he simply ignored the press representatives who had crowded into Raymond. And they hardly realize yet that, without in any way seeming to avoid them, he succeeded in foiling all their impertinent efforts to exploit him for their own sensational purposes."

"It was the rarest possible exhibition of wisdom and calm indifference to publicity I ever saw," added Stanton. "Mr. Carter, especially, seemed to be disturbed greatly on account of Jesus' indifference to his paper and all attempts to interview him. Did you hear a rumor to the effect that Mr. Carter was going on to New York to follow up his career there and expose him if possible?"

"I have heard something of the sort but paid no attention to it. Carter is a violent egotistic man, centering all his ambition about his paper and its influence. I know he was deeply disappointed because neither he nor any of his reporters could get a picture of Jesus for his paper."

"Nor any of the other press representatives. Mr. Maxwell, do you put that down as a miracle?"

"I don't attempt to explain it. But my faith in him after the first few doubtful hours seemed to me to rest on what he was. His power and his sinlessness and his superiority to all men impressed me irresistibly. I could not escape that for a moment."

Stanton was silent and both ministers seemed to be going over the great events through which they had passed. Then Stanton said gently,

"Mr. Maxwell, I have a statement which I wish to make to you, not a confession exactly, and yet it is in one way—but—the fact is—I am planning to get married—to have that home you said a few days I ought to have."

Maxwell looked at his assistant keenly.

"You're going to leave us? I don't know how I can spare you."

"I'm not planning to go yet, Mr. Maxwell. But I am planning to take from you one of your best—the best, I think—of your parishioners. All I can say is, I can't help myself and, to tell the truth, don't want to."

Mr. Maxwell's face suddenly brightened up, and he took a step nearer his assistant and put a hand on his shoulder.

"Richard," he said in the affectionate manner that had knit him so closely to his own young people all the years, "I congratulate Miss Page and you. I don't know which one needs the other most. Let me call Mrs. Maxwell. She will be delighted. In fact, we have once or twice actually wished this might happen."

He called to Mrs. Maxwell, and when she entered the study he was about to break the news to her, but she smilingly anticipated her husband.

"Oh, I know all about it, Mr. Stanton! I couldn't be more delighted if Virginia were my own daughter. You have our heartiest blessing, Mr. Stanton."

Stanton's eyes glowed as he took Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell's hands. "I shall prize your friendship for her sake and my own." And then he added as Virginia had, "It was an unspeakable joy to us to have Jesus speak to us as he did before he went away. That will follow us all our lives."

And then that silence fell between them—the silence that the world was to know more and more after its centuries of bustle and hurry and din—the silence that Jesus always brings—the peace that surpasseth understanding and is the source of more permanent power for righteousness than all noisy meetings and fussy "plans" for helping God do his work among men.

Stanton at last rose to go, but Maxwell asked him to wait a moment.

"I want you to see something Martha has."

He went out of the study and soon returned with Martha, whom Stanton had met. Mrs. Maxwell had told him something of the girl's history, and Stanton was deeply interested in it. Besides, had not Martha been the first person to announce to them the advent of Jesus into Raymond and tell the story of his appearance at her church meeting?

Martha came in, holding a little book in her hand. Maxwell asked her to show it to Stanton.

"Jesus gave it to me when he left the house," Martha said simply.

Stanton took the volume into his hands with a peculiar feeling of awe, and opened it at the first page, which had a book-mark in it, and read:

"Martha Lowell. From Jesus, her Friend."

There was a date, and "Raymond."

Stanton gazed at the common inscription, fascinated. The volume was a New Testament, a small, flexible, leather-covered book.

"Why, this is priceless, Martha. Did you know it was priceless?"

"I know it is the most precious thing I possess," said Martha simply.

"How did he happen to give it to you?"

"I asked him to write my name in my old Testament, and he wrote it with his own in this new one and gave it to me the morning he went away. Mr. Maxwell, do you think he will come back? Do you think we shall ever see him again? I had such a comforting talk with him that morning. You remember, Mrs. Maxwell, how he smiled when he stepped into the kitchen to say good-by."

Neither Mr. Maxwell nor Stanton could avoid a feeling of surprise.

"But why not? Why not?" Stanton was murmuring. "What did we expect to see? A Being so removed from common human things that he could have no feeling for human infirmities? No! No! We must overturn our old definition of God." He spoke aloud to Maxwell.

"Have you any such reminder as this?"

"No; have you?"

"No. I would give anything if I had. Why did we not ask him?"

Maxwell stared. "Yea, why didn't we? Martha was wise and now she is rich."

"He gave several of the men at the Mission little books with his name. Mr. Grey asked for them."

"Grey was wise, also," said Maxwell, smiling. "But I'm afraid, Martha, we shall never see Jesus in the flesh again unless we happen to go to New York or Washington while he is there. I am sure he will not return to Raymond."

"I shall remember him forever. He is my Lord and my God," said Martha gravely, as she went back to her work.

Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell and Stanton looked at one another.

"Mr. Maxwell," said Stanton, "did you ever wonder while Jesus was here about his—his—financial condition? Did he have any money? Did that trouble you any, or—how could he buy books, and travel, and all that?

Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell looked at each other significantly, and Mr. Maxwell answered: "He said, one day, he had not come to satisfy curiosity about himself, but to reveal the Father and his righteousness to the world."

"Thank God we have seen him!" said Stanton, as he went away, exalted in his whole being on account of his own transfiguring love for Virginia and the gracious, marvelous personal touch of Jesus in it all.

On this same day, in the forenoon, Jasper Carter sat in his office at the Gazette Building. Barnes sat opposite him. On the faces of both men was a look of deep feeling, and on Carter's it seemed near the point every moment of breaking out into one of his fits of characteristic anger and irritability.

"Nothing but a fake, a great big fake from beginning to end!" Carter was saying, as if he had already said it several times.

"Of course I don't agree with you, Mr. Carter," Barnes said very quietly. "But what is the use of arguing about it?"

"Arguing!" exclaimed Carter angrily. "Who is arguing? I am stating a fact. This person you call Jesus was a fakir. What did he do while he was here?"

"He converted me, for one thing," said Barnes gently.

Carter started as if he had been struck.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

"GOD has answered prayer for my son, for whom I have prayed very often. He has been converted and baptized recently, and I thank the Lord. Now son and daughter both have given their hearts to him. And I have been restored to health. God has answered my petitions many times." This happy letter comes from Mrs. H. H. J., of Farmington, Wash. Mrs. A. B. S. writes from Harrisburg, Pa.: "I wish to acknowledge to the world God's blessing to me in answering my prayer which I so earnestly desired when I was beyond all human aid. It is not the first prayer he has answered for me." Mrs. A. J. S., of Kansas City, Mo., writes: "I wish to add my testimony to our heavenly Father's great kindness in answering my prayers and comforting my lonely heart under great afflictions."

Mrs. N. M. Washburn writes: "Some time ago a dear relative was obliged to have a serious operation performed. She wrote to me about it and asked me to pray for her recovery. I did pray earnestly and she wrote to me after it was all over and said the doctors had said they never saw a patient get along so quickly as she did. Last winter my husband and I were so troubled about one of our children that was being led away, and I earnestly prayed for him, and God has answered our prayer, and he is now all we could wish him to be."

A. W. H. writes from Denver, Colo.: "God has answered our prayer and relieved us from a great financial trouble." Mr. and Mrs. C. J. B. write from Ohio: "Having been brought up to believe that prayer was an essential point of religious worship, it was always believed in, and used, but in a general way. It was not until a great sorrow came and the hosts of Pharaoh and the mountains and the deep sea shut out all hope of human relief that the divine hand in answer to our pleading day and night brought help, and convinced us anew of the power of prayer."

Acknowledgments of answer to prayer have also been received from:

A TIMELY GIFT TO INDIA

IT IS difficult for me adequately to express the relief and joy which came to me last evening through the arrival of your letter of August 12, and its enclosure of check for $150 from Mrs. Julia Ayres, of New Park, York County, Pa. I have written her a letter of appreciation and hearty thanks. For weeks our work here has been in extreme financial embarrassment. For this there have been many reasons. The cost of living has recently been extremely high. Some estimate the increase to have been 50 per cent. in the last few years. Again, we have had local famine conditions in the Ahmednagar District. A short time ago I was reduced to the possession of only fifty-seven cents! And I did not know whence relief would come. God mercifully inspired you some weeks ago to send $150 of Mrs. Ayres' gift to me for disposal. I thank Him and you.

In the great famine of 1899-1901, I was the chairman of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Famine Relief Fund, and how grateful I am that in that distress Dr. Klopsch made me your agent in the administration of American charitable money.

WHY The American Standard Bible

Is Best for the Sunday School

The exact thought of the sacred writers is given in readily understandable language in this version, thereby making its sacred teachings not only clearer to the young folks, but infinitely more interesting—every reading makes more Bible students.

The American Standard Version is used by the International Lesson Committee in the preparation of the Uniform and Graded Lessons, and by the leading Bible Scholars of the United States.

Even the English scholars say it is the best—Read what The London Quarterly Review says: "It is a noble work, destined to become the accepted Bible of the majority of the Anglo-Saxon race; and we are tempted to wish that it might be adopted as the one final revision of the English-speaking world."

Because of the great demand the publishers have issued it in over 200 different styles to meet every need. Prices from 35 cents to $50.00.

THOUGHTFUL CHRISTMAS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

AM I too late in telling you about this new Christmas, friends of mine? I hope not. I think that there is still time to show the proper holiday spirit in the new way.

Twenty years ago a little boy lay in a New York hospital, fighting with death. The trouble was pneumonia, mixed with late hours, very little food, and overwork. Through the month of January he suffered—suffered as the result of thoughtlessness. He was a cash-boy in a large department store and the holiday rush of good-natured present-givers had nearly worn the life out of his eleven-year-old body.

Mrs. Charles Russell Lowell was then serving as the first woman on the New York State Commission of Charities. She did not waste precious time in theorizing and telling what she intended to do—some day. With all her heart and soul and mind, she proceeded to lay the cornerstone of a now great organization, the National Consumers' League. And out of that organization many things have grown, including the thoughtful Christmas.

A letter came to the office the other day—a letter that looked interesting even from the outside. When I opened it, three papers fell out. One was a letter from the National Consumers' League, asking us to help them in their work; another was an article by Miss Florence Kelley, general secretary of the League; and the last one was a small écru card, printed with a message that stood out something like this:

"Shop early! Buy your Christmas presents early—early in the day, and do it now. That will be your biggest gift of the holidays to the workers behind counters and on delivery wagons."

I was walking through a store at a quarter after five—the store closed at half after. As I hurried through, a general impression of the place stamped itself on my brain. Behind the counters, the girls were straightening up the stock. Wearily they walked back and forth, faces pale, hair ruffed up, eyes tired. One girl pressed her hand frantically on her aching head, and a little maid—perhaps she was thirteen—sobbed from sheer nervousness as she made change for her last customer. The next day I happened to be in the same store, and presently I found myself at the little girl's counter.

"I saw you last night," I told her, "and you looked so tired."

"I was tired!" said the little girl. Almost defiantly she looked at me. "I always am tired at night! It's early in the year now and it isn't bad, but—" she paused for a moment while an expression of horror crossed her little face—"at Christmas time it's awful! Almost everybody wants everything in a hurry, and they lose their tempers and simply make us promise impossible things. "Why," her face darkened and the wide eyes grew narrow, "I used to like Christmas when I was a kiddie with a stocking and candy, and perhaps a doll baby. But now—now I hate Christmas! It isn't a time of joy and gladness—it's a time of sorrow and work."

I went away thinking hard. Have we forgotten the meaning of the day we celebrate? Have we made an almost pagan festival of our Lord's birthday?

A delivery boy brought a package up to the house one day, not long before last Christmas. We bought a great many things from his store, and mother knew him by sight. She opened the door to pay him, and suddenly I heard her speak.

"Why, Jimmy," she said, "how terribly tired you look!"

"I am tired," answered the boy simply. "I haven't slep for ages! Last night I didn't get home till after two, and then—well, you don't know where I live, but it's a pretty rough place, and I had a thousand dollars in my pocket. It belonged to the store, and I was responsible, for I had collected it. I sat up all night, but I had to drink black coffee to keep awake."

I once read the story of two girls who worked so hard that they had very little time to buy Christmas presents before the last minute. Each year passed, marked by gifts that exhausted their strength and their finances. And each year they had thought: "We know that we are entirely too extravagant. We know that it is unnecessary to bother so; we know that we are making the Christmas less happy for the employees in the stores. But it must be done!"

Every year they had followed out this rule until at last Common Sense came to them and said:

"Then why do you do it?"

That year the girls did a unique thing. The time that they would have been worrying away in the crowded shops they spent searching the countryside for pretty little winter plants, pine cones, birch bark, and ground pine. Then they made candy. When Christmas came many friends were surprised. Pretty boxes, filled with sweets, were a treat—and a novelty. Fragrant wreaths tied with flaming bows brought the pure breath of the woodlands with them. And the girls—rosy, happy, strangely triumphant—realized for the first time in years the true Christmas spirit.

Do you know that people are very much like sheep in that they follow a leader? Well, they are! Mrs. Smith will say to her friends: "Why should I do my shopping early when Mrs. White always does her shopping late? One person can make very little difference in the crowded stores!"

And Mrs. White will say the same thing—about Mrs. Smith.

Start something, girls! Make your chums say: "I am going to do my shopping early—Molly does." Then soon all of the girls in your town will be shopping early, too. It is ever so much easier for every one if you can only get into the habit of it.

The Consumers' League began in 1890, and the twenty-three years have made many changes in the life of the workers. But the cash girls still cry from dead-tiredness, and the delivery boys are pale and weary. And the Christmas time still holds terror instead of joy for many thousands.

The remedy lies with you—you! Are you going to let the responsibility slip away out of reach, or are you going to help?

WAITING FOR SANTY

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

I'VE hung up my Christmas stocking,
Has you got a stocking, too?
An' kitty an' me is waiting
An' wondering what we'll do
If a fat little man wif a funny face
Comes down in our chimney flue.

An' I'm listening here in the corner
Wif my ear to the bricks pressed tight,
An' only a candle is burning,
Wif a thin little baby light;
An' don't you know that I'm frightened?
For it's awfully late at night!

My kitty is getting sleepy,
She doesn't know Santy's name;
We've never waited before this year,
An' I think that we're so to blame;
'Cause while I was sleeping in my bed,
Was the onliest time he came.

What'll we do to Santy
When he jumps on the fire mat?
We'll say "hello" in the nicest way,
That a kiddie can—an' a cat.
An' we'll smother his face wif kisses;
Now what will he fink o' that?

A YEAR'S OPEN-AIR GOSPEL WORK

A LITTLE old woman stood on the curbstone in Printing House Square, New York, at noontime. As she was not able to peer above the heads of the crowd gathered at the base of the statue of Benjamin Franklin, she addressed the taller woman beside her.

"What is this? a religious meetin'?" she inquired.

"No, I think not," replied the taller woman, who descried the words "Lower Rents" on a banner displayed by the orator.

"Well, I'll keep on goin'," said the little woman, as a shade of disappointment clouded her face. "There's sure to be one somewhere 'round. There's one on most ev'ry corner nowadays. Except where the suffragettes get ahead of 'em," she concluded with a chuckle as she proceeded on her quest.

Truly, as she said, there was an open-air meeting of some kind "on 'most ev'ry corner" of New York City's streets during the open weather. Socialists and Anti-Socialists, suffragettes and anti-suffragists, Prohibitionists, anti-renters, political parties, and last but far from least, preachers and singers have been heard at street corners, in parks and squares, and wherever crowds pass or congregate.

At the meetings held by the Evangelistic Committee of New York City in Union and Madison Squares, men stood by the hundred, sometimes by the thousand, under the noonday sun or the starlit sky, listening to exposition of Scripture, followed by direct personal appeal. On Wall Street other hundreds congregated day after day. Many remarkable incidents occurred during the season. So intense was the interest manifested that plans were made for the organization of Bible classes as a permanent nucleus for holding the men together during the winter. The Evangelistic Committee during its ninth campaign conducted open-air services at 100 centers, shop meetings at 34, and tent meetings at 12. The attendance at the 2,586 meetings held during the season is reported to be 679,851, an increase of 258,315 over 1912. The 679,851 people were reached at a per capita expense of four cents, which is probably the lowest per capita expense of any form of Christian work in America. Children's meetings were held nightly in the tents and in some open-air centers. Boys and girls to the number of 95,689 were assembled in the various meetings. Most of these children have never been to any Sunday school and know nothing of religious instruction or moral training until they are taught in the tents. Services for children and young people were conducted in English. For adults there were meetings in Italian, Bohemian, Hungarian, Slovak, Polish, Swedish, German, French, Spanish, and Chinese, as well as for English-speaking audiences.

Kansas Crops in 1912 and 1913

IN a recent issue we gave the substance of a number of letters from CHRISTIAN HERALD correspondents in Kansas, showing the condition of the crops in different parts of that State. These reports are now confirmed by the official estimates of crop production in Kansas this year, compared with last year, which have been received from the Department of Agriculture in Washington, and which show the greatly reduced yield in all crops this season.

	1913—Preliminary Bushels	1912 Bushels
Corn	23,757,000	174,225,000
Wheat	86,957,000	92,290,000
Oats	36,894,000	55,040,000
Barley	1,426,000	4,136,000
Rye	378,000	477,000
Buckwheat	10,000	16,000
Potatoes	2,800,000	5,740,000
Sweet potatoes	250,000	495,000
Flaxseed	276,000	300,000
	Tons	Tons
Hay	1,234,000	2,440,000

Kansas is showing a splendid spirit, however, in declining outside assistance and resolving to take care of its own needs.

BOOK RECEIVED

Hunting in the Upper Yukon, by Thomas Martindale, is an interesting and instructive narrative of the author's experiences on a hunting trip in that region, famous by reason of the gold craze that has sent thousands of fortune-hunters into its barren reaches. The reader gets into intimate acquaintance with the country, its people and its wild life through Mr. Martindale's leisurely anecdotal style, and shares in several very interesting hunting episodes. The purpose of the writer he states to be "to feature life in this almost fabled section rather than to give his whole attention to the stalking and killing of game." The reader must expect the free vernacular of the wilderness at times. Published by George W. Jacobs & Co., Philadelphia. 320 pages excellently printed, 25 full-page illustrations. Price, $2 net; $2.20 by mail.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Bible Men and Women*

THERE were no moving pictures in the day when the eleventh chapter of Hebrews was written. If there had been there is no doubt that many of the scenes described in that chapter would have been reproduced in that way. Some of them are now represented by this modern photographic miracle, but the whole chapter, simply in its printed words, seems like a series of motion pictures.

We have here a quick review of the lives of some of the great men and women of the Old Testament, who trusted God. This chapter has a very important place in the New Testament. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews has been pointing out the super-excelling glory of the Christian faith. He has shown how much greater it is in its cost, its scope, its results, than the ceremonial system of the Jews. And he shows that the key which unlocks all the splendors of this new and perfect plan is faith. Having stated this he goes on to show that the great men and women of Jewish history had really won their achievements by the same principle which would admit Jews and Gentiles alike now to the glories of the Gospel.

Abel, Enoch, Noah and Abraham stand out from the mist of the earth's early morning as the men who by faith drew near to God. Abel showed the right spirit in his sacrifice, and made a fitting choice of things to be offered. Enoch—very little is said of Enoch in the Old Testament, but in the few lines devoted to him the statement is twice made that he "walked with God." These thousands of years later there is no nobler nor higher thing that a man can do. In fact that is the very essence of real living. The wonder of faith and of the Gospel itself is that it brings us into personal friendship and communion with God. Any life lived in this close personal touch with God is truly great.

Abraham was called "the friend of God." (II Chron. 20: 7; Isa. 41: 8; James 2: 23.) He, too, walked with God, and when the call came to leave his home and his father's family to go out alone by faith he trusted that unseen Friend, and "went out, not knowing whither he went." Abraham was a practical man, doing his daily work well, accumulating a large fortune and great power. But although he lived in this world his thoughts were in the other world, "for he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

Sarah believed God's promise that she should have a son. She had been honored by being chosen to become the mother of the great race of Israel, both because she was the wife of God's friend Abraham and because of her own spiritual fitness. And when the promise came she received it by faith and so became not only the mother of a great race, but one of the ancestral mothers of the Messiah.

Isaac is not one of the prominent characters of the Old Testament, but he too was faithful, as was his father Abraham. He never forgot that strange day with his father upon the mountain, when God had intervened to save his life. And he passed on to his son Jacob the blessing and the promise. Jacob too lived a life of faith, and passed forward the blessing to the sons of Joseph. Joseph himself led a life of splendid fidelity, keeping true to God in spite of temptation and trouble, and later in spite of great honor and prosperity.

Moses was another friend of God. He became the emancipator of God's chosen people, and the founder of their civic life. Three of the verses about Moses, 25-27, are so striking that they should be read without fail at this meeting. They are good verses, too, to memorize.

> Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward. By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king: for he endured, as seeing him who was invisible.

By faith the Red Sea was passed. By faith the walls of Jericho fell down. In that reference to Jericho lies the story of another great hero, Joshua. Read at least the first chapter of his book. He is one of the thrilling characters of the Old Testament, like Joseph and Daniel.

Rahab's name occurs because of the one great service she rendered to God's people. Her life may have been a mistaken, even a wicked one, but when the time came to do a real service for God's cause, she did it, and so won favor for herself and her kin.

In studying the lesson it is not necessary to be limited to the names mentioned in this chapter. The topic also includes New Testament characters. Look up the lives of the apostles, especially Paul and Peter, John, Andrew and Philip. Find some of the New Testament women — Elisabeth, the Marys, Martha, Dorcas, Phœbe, and "the elect lady." Back in the Old Testament study Caleb, Jonathan, Josiah, Hezekiah, Ezra, Nehemiah, Miriam, Esther and Ruth.

* "LESSONS FROM THE MEN AND WOMEN OF THE BIBLE." (After the opening exercises the young men and young women may hold separate meetings.) Heb. 11: 1-40. Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic for Sunday, December 14, 1913.

Holy Days and Holidays*

"DENATURIZING" is an odd word. It means taking the spirit out of a thing, changing the nature of it, making it do something or mean something it was not intended to do or mean. Have we been doing that with our holidays and our holy days?

The true note is struck in our last Scripture reference, Luke 2: 10, 11: "Great joy," "a Saviour." Holy days are for rest and worship and service for others; holidays are for rest and recreation and merriment. In both holy days and holidays the joy is to be linked to the fact of the Saviour's presence. The Scripture references give a number of badly managed occasions which suggest some of the faults of modern holy days and holidays. Ex. 32 tells of a disgraceful, blasphemous episode when the Israelites, under Aaron's leadership, made and worshiped a false god, indulging, in connection with their false worship, in wild orgies of wicked pleasures. Neh. 8: 9-12 tells of a time when the people were not too gay, but too sad. I Cor. 11: 20-29 warns the early Christians against making the Lord's Supper the occasion of over-indulgence.

All these errors we are in danger of translation into modern life. Rest, worship, service, recreation, wholesome pleasure—thorough-going, enthusiastic joy—these, with the presence of our great Friend Christ, will make blessed holy days and glad and helpful holidays.

* "DENATURIZING OUR HOLY DAYS AND HOLIDAYS." Ex. 32: 5-8., 15-20; I Cor. 11: 20-29; Neh. 8: 9-12; Luke 2: 10, 11. Epworth League Topic for Sunday, December 14, 1913.

CALIFORNIA'S FIRST GOLD NUGGET

BY W. W. ALLEN, SR.

IN THE year 1877 I was employed by the settlers upon a disputed land grant in the southeastern part of Los Angeles County to defend their claims of titles to said lands. Upon my first visit to a meeting of the Settlers' League upon the land, I was introduced to Peter L. Wimmer and Elizabeth Jane Wimmer, his wife, who were among the settlers. They were then poor and contesting for their home with the others. I soon became interested in them. They had crossed the plains in 1846 with Captain Harlan's band from Fort Independence on the Missouri River (now St. Joseph, Mo.), and, after six months' travel through hardships, scenes, and incidents which would fill a large book, arrived at Fort Sutter on the Sacramento River, where Sacramento, the capital city of this State, now stands, in the month of November, 1846.

Mrs. Wimmer was the first white woman who reached the fort, bringing with her four children. Captain Sutter, then the military commander there, paid great respect to them. Mr. James W. Marshall crossed the plains in 1845 upon the northern trail, through Oregon Territory, and landed at Sutter's Fort in 1845, bought two leagues of land on Butte Creek, now Butte County, and stocked it with cattle. He was a bachelor and made his home with the Wimmers after their arrival. In 1847, after the close of the war between Mexico and the United States, all were looking forward to a large American immigration. Marshall and Captain Sutter concluded to build a saw and grist mill upon the American River, sixty miles north of the fort, where Captain Sutter owned a large body of fine pine timber. Marshall and Peter Wimmer were sent to hunt up a location, and selected the place where gold was found; first, because it was convenient to the timber, and second, because it would be possible to transport the lumber to the fort by wagon. The mill site was upon a creek running down from the mountains and near to the American River.

Peter Wimmer was born and raised in Ohio, and was a skilled mechanic and a good millwright. Mrs. Wimmer was to be the cook. On August 19, 1847, all hands, with ten Indians, set out for Coloma, and work commenced on the mill, about sixty miles from the fort.

The mill building progressed slowly, but during the month of December, 1847, the dam and headgate had been completed and water was turned on at night so as to wash out the sand and gravel which would be dug up by the men during the day. As this work progressed, each morning when the water was turned off, shining specks would appear all along the mill race. On the morning of the 19th of January, 1848, the water had been turned off, and Marshall and Peter Wimmer were walking along the tail race, where the water had washed away all the loose dirt. Marshall, observing a shining specimen lying on a flat rock close to the side of the race, picked it up and handed it to Wimmer, saying, "What do you think of that, Peter?" Peter took it, examined it, and said, "This must be gold. Jennie is going to make soap to-day; we will have her boil it in the lye all day." To this they agreed; sent it to Jennie, who threw it in the kettle, where it remained until next morning, when she was asked by the men, teasingly, what kind of soap her gold made. Going for her kettle, she poured out the soap, and there was the bright, shining nugget, polished by the action of the boiling lye. Seizing it, she sprang into the cabin, threw it on the table between her husband and Marshall, shouting aloud, "There is your nugget, and it is pure gold." Other small nuggets were collected, and four days after, Marshall took them all to the fort, where they were tested and proved to be gold. General Sutter accompanied Marshall back to the mill, and there they presented the first nugget to Mrs. Wimmer, saying to her, "Here, Jennie, this will make you a nice ring, and it shall be yours." Jennie kept it with a woman's care, and when I went to Washington, D. C., in 1877, she placed it in my care with the request that I exhibit it to the President of the United States and to his cabinet, which I did. Afterwards, and for many years, Mr. and Mrs. Wimmer were poor, and I had contributed much to their support from time to time and had them visit my home. Jennie would never take the nugget back from me. I furnished the mining bureau of the State with a facsimile of it, exhibited it at the State fair, and wrote the California Gold Book, or History of the Discovery of Gold in California, and exhibited the nugget at the Columbian Exhibition in Chicago in 1893.

In 1849 Mr. E. H. Hargraves, an engineer in New South Wales, hearing of the discovery of gold in California, sailed on the British bark Elizabeth Archer, landing at San Francisco, proceeded to the mines at Sutter's Mill, lived with Mr. and Mrs. Wimmer, learned how to extract gold by means of the rocker and sluice, went back to Australia and opened up the gold mines of New South Wales, for which he was made a knight by the British Government and pensioned for life.

Southington, Conn.

I understand that I have the right to have all of these sent to different addresses, so please be careful to have them correctly labeled and addressed. They are for Christmas presents for my friends above. Could I have a card of Christmas Greeting sent with The Christian Herald? If so, I will be glad to pay any extra expense. Please let me know.

Cordially yours,
M. M. N.

Now, here was an idea! Doubtless thousands of CHRISTIAN HERALD subscribers, harassed by the yearly recurring problem of "What shall I give this year?" would welcome this suggestion which is capable of so much expansion. It is possible indeed to make combinations of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Christian Herald Almanac, the Family Altar Calendar, My Garden of Hearts, Wonder Stories, and Magazine Clubs, costing from $1.50 up, and have THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and the books sent to as many addresses as there are articles, thus fulfilling the Christmas obligation to many more people than might otherwise be possible.

With the idea of presenting such an opportunity, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is issuing a beautiful little Christmas Folder (illustrated in full color), having the legend "With Every Good Wish for Christmas" on the title page, and a beautiful poem by James Russell Lowell, entitled "A Christmas Carol," and the whole tied very prettily with ribbon. On the last page is the following inscription:

At the direction of ..... we have placed your name on our list for a year's subscription to The Christian Herald, with every good wish for a Merry Christmas. May The Christian Herald, with its weekly messages, bring full measure of pleasure and profit to you throughout the year.

The blank space for the name above will be filled in by us for any one who desires to send a gift subscription of this kind, and the little booklet itself will constitute a precious remembrance for whomsoever may receive it.

The idea of giving THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as a Christmas Present is particularly happy, since it will not only call to the memory of the recipient the kind act of the donor at least once every week in the year, but the donor will have the satisfaction of knowing that this journal of inspiration and religious uplift will wield its influence in one more American household.

Again, suppose the Family Worship Calendar is selected as one of the gifts. It contains 365 leaves, on each of which is printed a Memory Text, a Prayer and a Bible Reading from the pens of well-known clergymen at home and abroad. There, again, will the recipient have cause to remember the good friend who sent it at least once every day for a whole year.

Or, suppose The Fundamentals be selected. There are Ten Books, providing what is equivalent to a course in theology—a splendid Christmas Present for a friend or relative.

The Christian Herald Almanac (which is sent free with annual subscriptions) is a mine of information—a Small Encyclopedia to which any friend will refer many, many times during the next twelve months.

The Red Letter Bible and the Red Letter New Testament will make still more lasting presents. The friend who receives one of these will be reminded of the donor for years to come. These Testaments and Bibles are unique. In the Old Testament passages quoted by our Lord, or directly related to incidents to which he referred, are printed in Red. In the New Testament, the words universally accepted as those of the Saviour are printed in Red.

FOLLOWING ARE SOME COMBINATIONS WHICH MAY BE MADE

Price	Articles	No. of Presents
$1.50	Christian Herald and Almanac	One or two
$1.80	Christian Herald, Almanac and Family Worship Calendar	One, two or three
$3.00	Christian Herald, Almanac and Bible . .	Three
$3.00	Christian Herald, Almanac, Garden of Hearts and Wonder Stories	Four
$3.20	Christian Herald, Almanac, Wonder Stories and The Fundamentals	Four

We would suggest to all who desire to take advantage of this unique way of sending Christmas Presents at small cost, to many friends and relatives, that orders be sent at once, as the labor of mailing the presents to separate addresses may cause some slight delay, and of course all of our friends will want the gifts forwarded to their friends in time for Christmas or for New Year's, as the case may be.

The Christian Herald, Bible House, N.Y.

The Howard Watch

One very good way to show your affection and your high hope for the boy is to give him a HOWARD Watch for Christmas.

The HOWARD means so much more than the giving.

It pledges the young man to a fine tradition.

It expresses so well your expectation for him and the work he is to do in the world.

To own a HOWARD Watch is to be in distinguished company. The HOWARD is identified with the life and history of prominent Americans ever since 1842. It is pre-eminently the watch of successful Americans to-day.

A HOWARD Watch is always worth what you pay for it.

The price of each watch is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached—from the 17-jewel (double roller) in a Crescent Extra or Boss Extra gold-filled case at $40, to the 23-jewel at $150—and the EDWARD HOWARD model at $350.

Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD Watch. Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town and talk to him. He is a good man to know.

Admiral Sigsbee has written a little book, "The Log of the HOWARD Watch," giving the record of his own HOWARD in the U.S. Navy. You'll enjoy it. Drop us a post card, Dept. W, and we'll send you a copy.

Prayer-Topic Duplex Envelopes

Duplex RICHMOND PATENTED D E TRADE MARK

At the conference of leaders immediately following the Men's National Missionary Congress at Chicago, in 1910, prominent place was given to the discussion of ways and means of deepening the prayer life. It was felt that in addition to the benefit derived from united prayer, there would be a distinct advantage in having this united prayer associated with the weekly offering. A committee was therefore appointed to inquire into the practicability of having a carefully selected list of prayer topics printed upon the back of the Duplex Envelopes.

We gladly agreed to co-operate with the Laymen's Movement by printing the topics. This excerpt from "Men and Missions," September, 1910, explains itself:

"The Duplex Envelope Company makes no charge for this extra printing, though it involves a large amount of additional labor. The Laymen's Missionary Movement has, of course, absolutely no financial interest in this company, but regards it as worthy of all confidence and appreciation for the splendid work it is doing toward better business methods in church and missionary finance."

The number of churches requesting the Prayer-Topic Envelopes is very gratifying, and it grows larger each year.

Write for "DUPLEX CHURCH AND SUNDAY SCHOOL METHODS," and for free PRAYER-TOPIC UNIT No. 12.

A PROTESTANT PROTEST

Press Despatch in New York Tribune, November 19

WASHINGTON, November 18. — Protestant clergymen of the capital have launched a protest against the official atmosphere they contend is thrown about the annual Pan-American Thanksgiving mass here in St. Patrick's Church, which generally is attended by the President, members of the cabinet, justices of the Supreme Court, the diplomatic corps and other dignitaries. President Wilson has accepted an invitation to attend this year.

The Rev. Dr. R. H. McKim, former president of the Episcopal House of Deputies, is the author of a resolution adopted to-day by the Episcopal, Lutheran, Baptist and Disciples of Christ clergy, and which will be considered by the Presbyterian clergymen on Monday. The resolution says:

"The attendance of our Chief Magistrate and members of his cabinet year after year has been made use of to give color to the Roman claim that the service is now the official celebration of Thanksgiving Day in our national capital. This fact has been understood in the United States and abroad to give the Roman Catholic Church a prestige and pre-eminence over all other churches. Every effort is made by the Roman hierarchy to give this Roman mass the color of an official function.

"We protest against the attempt to convert our national Thanksgiving Day into a Roman Catholic festival in a service entirely out of harmony with the history of the genius of our country and the spirit and purpose of the day.

"We desire to give voice to the widespread feeling of indignation among millions of Protestants of America against the efforts of the Roman press and the Roman hierarchy to exploit the presence of our Chief Magistrate and some of his cabinet (which we are convinced has only been intended as an act of courtesy and good will) for the purpose of glorifying the Roman Catholic Church and giving this service an official characterization it does not and cannot possess."

A HOME MISSIONARY'S TRIBUTE

I do not know what I should do without THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I am living up in the Sierra Nevadas, working among the Diggers Indians. In all this part of the country, those poor people have never heard the Gospel until I came to them, two years ago. As one poor fellow said, before I talked him if he knew anything of God: "I have heard white man swear by God." He knows no restraint and washed mine suffer one time through when up to his knee he met a rattlesnake which came to drink in the ditch where Jones was washing again. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD comes to me and I am still filled with Christian deliverance. No Christians, except my own people; they are the gospel of all American Indians. No grass-roots Christ-centered, and how I miss those things! Exactly I look for THE HERALD. It is sent to [illegible] It is their contribution to get the Bible. For it, and I cannot do without it. May it long continue to be a blessing to the readers. I serve God, God! (Miss) H. M. L.

DAVID'S NAME

IT WAS hard for David to understand how, when his dear grandpa died and was taken away from them all and put down into the ground, he could still be alive and, though perhaps so wonderfully changed that even David might not at first know him, still be the same dear grandpa that David so greatly loved. To make this plain to him, his mother did a beautiful thing. She took David with her out into the garden one spring morning and together they planted some seeds. These seeds, unknown to David, his mother planted in the letters of his name. "Do you see, David," she said, "how we are putting these down under the earth where no one can see them—just as if they were dead?" "They are dead," answered David. "We have buried my seeds." His mother said nothing more, but one morning in June the little boy came running into the house to her, his cheeks flushed, his eyes shining with happiness: "Oh, mother, mother," he cried, "my name is growing in the garden!"

He caught his mother's hand and drew her out with him to show her. There, where they had buried David's seeds, his name was growing in lovely, bright colored flowers!

"That is resurrection, David, dear," said his mother, pressing his hand gently. "We had to bury the seeds first before your name could grow in these beautiful flowers."

David was silent a moment; then he turned and looked up at his mother. "I think it is beautiful," he said. "And I understand about grandpa now."

"I knew you would, dear," his mother replied, kneeling down and taking him in her arms.

WHERE IS SILVIO PELLICO'S BIBLE?

decision on his case, and that he had been condemned to death, which punishment, however, had been commuted to fifteen years of carcère duro in the fortress of Spielberg, near the town of Brünn, the capital of Moravia. His answer was, "Sia fatta la voluntà di Dio." A few days later he was conducted back to Venice to receive his sentence in public. He was there placed on a platform in the Piazzetta, when it was read out to him. The Piazzetta, the piazza, and all the places near were crowded by tens of thousands of sympathetic Venetians, who would fain have rescued him. But what could they do? Not only were there hundreds of Austrian soldiers, but loaded cannon, beside which stood soldiers with lighted matches, covered the people on all sides. His imprisonment at San Michele was short, a little over three months, for on March 25, 1822, he was conducted in chains to Spielberg and placed in a subterranean dungeon. A smith came and fastened chains to his feet, and in his cell hung a huge chain which, he was told, would be used to fasten him to the wall if he were in any way insubordinate.

His health failing, he was, after a year or two, transferred to a prison on the level of the ground. Altogether he spent seven and a half years here, making ten years of imprisonment altogether. He carried his Bible with him to Spielberg, but after some time all his books were taken from him, and he was allowed to have only some of the religious tractates and books of the church. His effects, books, clothing, etc., were then sold, for, he tells us, the money they realized, with other money taken from him, was restored to him when he was liberated.

And what became of his Bible? There happened then to be at Spielberg Cavaliere Taush, consul general, resident at Leghorn. This official carried it to Leghorn. After his death and that of his sons, his library was sold off, and some of the books, amongst them the Bible, were bought by a street hawker of books and papers, who lived at Pisa.

One day the prior of a place near Pisa, called the Baths of San Giuliano, examining the hawker's barrow, saw the Bible, and bought it for a few pence. He then communicated with the famous book-collector of Milan, Synn Schifatti, who knew Silvio Pellico's Bible well. This man went expressly to the Baths of San Giuliano to see it, when he was able to identify it as the very one Silvio and Foscolo and others used before Silvio's arrest. The Bible was entitled Biblia Sacra Vulgatae Editionis Sixti V et Clemn. VIII Pont. Max. auctoritate recognita cum notis chronologicis — Venetiis apud Nicol. Pezzana 1742. It was a folio Bible of 1,060 pages, bound in parchment. On the fly-leaf was written, "Mi costó lire 22, fu comprata alla libreria del professore Andral di Parigi [It cost me 22 francs. Was bought at the bookstore of Professor Andral of Paris.] Silvio Pellico 1819." The only markings were on the margin of Psalm 37 and a passage in Proverbs. But all the Psalms showed that they had been read and re-read and wept over. Of course the fact that he had neither pen nor pencil in his prison may account for the few markings of passages.

In closing this article I am led to ask: Why are the Italians so anxious to discover the whereabouts of Silvio Pellico's Bible and to recover it? Obviously, one reason is because it belonged to Silvio Pellico, whose memory they cherish. Silvio Pellico is admired to-day as one of Italy's poets, patriots, martyrs, and men of unblemished character and life. Again, anything belonging to him has a value in the eyes of his countrymen, who today inherit the blessings of liberty and education and Italian unity for which he and others suffered and are

Not DOWN to a Price

THE fame of the Remington as the "Recognized Leader Among Typewriters" is an asset. It is also an obligation. The typewriter-using public expects more and demands more of the Remington product than of any other. We are glad of it. This demand proves Remington leadership. The public merely demands what it has been educated to demand—educated by Remington standards.

Unswerving adherence to a standard is always the price of leadership. The Remington Typewriter maintains its leadership in the same way that it won its leadership; by recognizing only one standard—THE BEST.

The latest achievements of Remington leadership are the visible models 10 and 11 and the Adding and Subtracting Typewriter. Have you seen them? If not, call at the nearest Remington office, or send for illustrated booklet which will tell you the very last word in typewriter development.

ought. Silvio Pellico's Bible is so sought after because of all it was him in his solitary confinement and ute and prolonged sufferings. But ere is another reason, and that is cause there is a marvelous awaken- g of interest in the Bible throughout aly. I might mention many facts in pport of this statement, but I am ntent to give but one, and that is at it pays a secular publisher to int and sell the Bible purely as a mmercial speculation. Some years o, as I wrote in the Scotsman at the me, Signor Sonzogno, the proprietor id publisher, in Milan, of the Secolo id other newspapers, published a rge illustrated Bible in parts at the uivalent of one cent each. Wher- er his newspaper went his Bible ent. When completed, the Bible cost n francs ($2). I have a letter from m in which he tells me that he sold fty thousand copies, bringing him in alf a million francs, or $100,000. ince then a second edition was called or, and it, too, was soon exhausted, nd now a third edition is coming out nd is selling well.

Give Love with Your Gift

A GREAT preacher once reminded his hearers that Christmas is not one with on the 25th of December. The legends about the birth of the Baby relate that after the wise men had seen his star in the East they traveled twelve days and twelve nights until, on the twelfth night, they came to the saintly stables and unloaded their camels so as to give him gold for a King, frankincense for a High Priest, and myrrh for the great Physician.

And so this preacher said he liked to have a special remembrance of Christmas on each one of these twelve days. This would be a good plan for us also. We may plead that we are too poor to give gifts for twelve days, that we can hardly keep Christmas on one day. But the best gifts which we may give to our friends are not those which we purchase with silver and gold. The great German preacher Schleiermacher once said that if a man gives a present he must put something of himself into that present to make it of real worth. You cannot go to a store and buy a dollar's worth of love and have it weighed out for you. Love cannot be put in the price current. It must come from the giver's own heart.

True love can make precious the poorest gift;
Remember, it's never been told
Which one of the Wise Men brought the myrrh,
Or which one brought the gold.

And so, if we give sincerely, our gifts are the sign or the emblem of love, friendship and goodwill. But if we lack the material thing to give—that which is only the token—why should we withhold the gift of greater worth, our goodwill and our love? Thoreau must have had this thought in mind when, in speaking of New Year's gifts, he said: "That would be a gift indeed, if we would bestow on each other our sincerity."

Therefore, no one is too poor to give gifts that are more valuable than silver and gold can purchase, more precious than diamonds and rubies. Let us give goodwill, and sincerity, and love for twelve days in memory of the birth of the blessed Christ-child.

WIFE WON

Husband Finally Convinced.

Some people are wise enough to try ew foods and beverages and then gener- us enough to give others the benefit of heir experience. A wife writes:

"No slave in chains, it seemed to me, as more helpless than I, a coffee cap- ve. Yet there were innumerable warn- ngs—waking from a troubled sleep with feeling of suffocation, at times dizzy and ut of breath, attacks of palpitation of he heart that frightened me.

(Tea is just as injurious as coffee be- ause it contains caffeine, the same drug ound in coffee.)

"At last my nervous system was so dis- rranged that my physician ordered 'no nore coffee.' I capitulated.

"Determined to give Postum a fair rial, I prepared it according to directions n the pkg., obtaining a dark brown liquid vith a rich snappy flavour similar to coffee. When cream and sugar were dded, it was not only good but delicious.

"Noting its beneficial effects in me the est of the family adopted it—all except ny husband, who would not admit that coffee hurt him. Several weeks elapsed during which I drank Postum two or three imes a day, when, to my surprise, my husband said: 'I have decided to drink Postum. Your improvement is so appa- ent—you have such a fine color—that I propose to give credit where credit is due.' And now we are coffee-slaves no onger."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Well- ville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and with cream and sugar makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds.

IT IS PRETTY NEARLY TIME TO GET THE NET ON THIS WHOLE BACK-TO-THE-LAND BOOM. "This serial is not the usual rhapsody of the first summer back on the land, with the intelligent city feller as his own hero, beating the country people at their own game. On the contrary it aims to show how difficult the country game really is, and what mistakes the would-be farmer will fall into. I have had my eye upon country readers too, and am writing from their point of view even more than from that of people who are all lit up by books on Three Acres and Liberty. What I am after is the truth, indicated by the word net in the title." This is what the author says of his story, BACK TO THE FARM—NET, an unusual serial without a line of love-making in it. It begins in January in The Country Gentleman.

ARE YOU WILLING TO WAIT A DOZEN YEARS FOR A FORTUNE if you can live off the fat of the land while you wait? The formula is this: Four fields + pecan trees + hogs + cowpeas = $40 an acre from pork for twelve years, then tons of pecans at fifty cents a pound. Figure it out for yourself when you read Pigs, Peas and Pecans, in The Country Gentleman.

MILK IS AN IDEAL FOOD FOR BABIES AND GERMS. The germs thrive on it; the babies don't—if the germs see it first. You can work out your own mathematical formula: Clean milk = one healthy baby; or, unclean milk = one sick baby + doctor's bills + the undertaker. We hate to mention the undertaker; but we'd best face him, and keep him out of the house—really clean milk will keep him out. Get acquainted with Herr Doctor Schlossman's slogan, Sterben keine—none die. It goes deeper into the question of baby life saving than you've ever dreamed of. Because Doctor Schlossman's fact of today in Germany is our dream of a decade hence is no reason why you should not read Milk for the Babies, in The Country Gentleman.

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON is better qualified than any other man in the country to write about the problems of negro labor. Big planters take their troubles to him when they aren't getting along right with their black labor; the negroes take their side of the argument to the head of Tuskegee Institute for solution. Because he is the one man to talk intelligently on both sides of this question, so vital to the South, we asked him to write an article for us. He tells how not to succeed and then how to succeed in Some Suggestions as to Negro Labor, which will be printed in The Country Gentleman.

THE MAN-WITH-THE-LITTLE-GARDEN is not neglected. Every week we give him a page or more devoted to his vegetables, flowers and fruits. But we really are ambitious to do more for him. We want to lead him beyond the little garden and show him the promised land of the larger place—the neglected farm of twenty acres or so—that means a larger life. The business of farming is in its infancy; perhaps it's the business man who will remove its swaddling clothes. If your interest is in a window-box, or a quarter-section of land, you'll find that the BEST TRADE JOURNAL OF THE BUSINESS OF FARMING is The Country Gentleman.

Everything about the BUSINESS of farming you will find in THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN, the national farm weekly. Five cents the copy, of all newsdealers; $1.50 the year, by mail.

Questions and Answers

M. S., Sinnickson, Va. What is the full meaning of I Cor. 10: 31? How can everything be done to the glory of God? Would not this necessitate the giving up of many pleasures?

This exhortation refers to our motive, our purpose in life. The one supreme purpose of every Christian life should be to glorify God—that is, to reflect credit and honor upon him. A patriot wishes to bring honor to his country, a wife to her husband, a pupil to his master, a friend to his friend. If we truly love God we shall be anxious that he shall be understood and obeyed and honored and loved by the world. The whole matter becomes simpler when we relate it to Christ. In Col. 3: 17, where Paul repeats this same idea, his words are: "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." The true friend of Jesus wishes to please him in all things, and earnestly desires that all men should love and honor him. Therefore, since he is known as a Christian and bears the name of Christ, he must do nothing un-Christlike, nothing that will bring reproach to the name of Christ. Instead of taking pleasure out of life this way of living brings vast pleasure into life. All pure and wholesome pleasure is increased infinitely by the thought of Christ's love. As the song of birds and blossom of flowers reflect the beauty and glory of God, so do the innocent, natural joys of a Christian show the world God's kindness, his beauty and his goodness.

Mrs. J. F. M., Spring Water, Ore. 1. The phrase, "The Lord tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," is not in the Bible, but is from Laurence Sterne's Sentimental Journey. 2. Your question in regard to the work of Judas being foreordained is one which has often been discussed. It can only be answered by referring to Matt. 26: 54; Luke 22: 22; John 6: 64; John 17: 12 and related passages in the prophecies. Some have argued that Judas was chosen in order that the divine purpose might be accomplished; others that Jesus, who knew the hearts of men, discerned in Judas the latent germs of evil and foresaw the sequel. Still others have held that Judas believed in a literal Messianic kingdom and wanted to hasten events by precipitating a crisis. The subject is one concerning which none can make a positive assertion, however, or go beyond our Lord's own language as disclosed in the Gospels.

J. H. S., Beaver Falls, Pa. In Acts 7: 41, 42, Stephen was describing the idolatries of the Israelites which had driven them into the wilderness as a punishment, where they were abandoned to the worship of the "heavenly bodies"—the stars. During their long stay in Egypt they had become accustomed to the idols of that land and the golden calf was one of these. Possibly Apis, or Mnevis, was the Egyptian model of the calf they set up in the desert. They had also learned the worship of Moloch and Remphan, heathen deities representing the divine powers ascribed to nature.

E. E. G., Fairfield, N. Y. 1. The passage in Gen. 49: 10 is one which has ever been regarded by Christians and by the Jews themselves as indicating the Messiah. In ancient Egyptian monuments of important personages the position of the secretary or scribe who records the prince's or ruler's decrees or laws is a kneeling one, almost literally "between his feet." The Targum renders the passage thus: "One having the principality shall not be taken from the house of Judah, nor a scribe from his children's children, until the Messiah come whose the kingdom is." Still another version from the same source is, "Kings shall not fail from the house of Judah, nor skilful doctors of the law from his children's children, until the time when the King's Messiah shall come." The allusion to Judah is interpreted to refer to the primacy of that tribe in war, which was to continue until the promised land was conquered and the ark of the covenant deposited at Shiloh. Some of the ablest expositors point out that the descent of our Lord from Judah is not conveyed in the words "from between his feet," hence the question of lineage is not involved. 2. All we know concerning the millennium is what the Bible tells us, although there are different interpretations on the subject. The time of its coming no one can predict.

Mrs. J. S., Grady, N. M. 1. While there are many missions in South America, there have been comparatively few attempts to give the Gospel to Patagonia. In 1851 Mr. Williams undertook to do missionary work in Tierra del Fuego, but temporarily abandoned it on account of unusual dangers. Then Captain Gardner took it up, a Patagonian Missionary Society was formed in 1844 and another attempt was made to establish a station at Tierra del Fuego, only to fail like the first. In 1850 Gardner, together with Richard Williams, Rev. Mr. Maidment and several Christian laymen, took up the forlorn hope. The story of their subsequent experiences is one of the most thrilling in the history of missions. Snows, arctic cold, and the intense hostility of the natives overcame the brave party, and one by one they died, their bodies being found next year when a relief vessel arrived. Their work, however, resulted in the firm establishment of a mission in 1854 in that inhospitable region. In 1902 there were three mission stations. 2. The passage in Ps. 22: 27 refers to the coming conversion of all the Gentile nations consequent on the conversion of Israel. They shall "remember" him whom they have so long forgotten by apostasy and shall turn to him. The whole heathen world is to be awakened out of its insensibility and superstition.

A number of readers have requested information and suggestions for the formation and conduct of a Men's or Adult Bible Class, and for courses of study. The following books are recommended. They can be secured through any religious or denominational publishing house. The Adult Bible Class; Its Organization and Work, by W. C. Pearce; The How Book, by Marshall A. Hudson; Adult Class Study, by Irving T. Wood. For courses of study, the following will be found helpful and satisfactory: The Making of a Nation, by Professors Kent and Jenks; The Manhood of the Master, by Fosdick; Prophecy and the Prophets, by F. C. Eiselen. Classes of senior age (seventeen to twenty) will find the new senior text books of the International Graded Lessons especially interesting and profitable. The second year senior is a survey of Old Testament history and literature; the third year is a survey of New Testament history and literature.

A Reader. 1. What was the cup to which Jesus referred in his question: "The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" Was it the suffering on the cross? 2. Was Jesus afraid he would die in Gethsemane? I have heard the agony in the garden explained in this way.

1. The "cup" undoubtedly referred to the whole sum of Christ's suffering in making the atonement for sin, particularly the suffering on the cross. 2. There have been many explanations of the garden agony. The explanation you mention does not seem convincing. Nor does the answer sometimes given, that Christ shrank from the mere suffering, seem adequate, considering his splendid and unfailing courage. His words on the cross: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" imply that there was a real separation from the Father in this dreadful experience. There is a depth of mystery here before which the most thoughtful and reverent may well pause. Yet it seems reasonable to believe that, although Christ's soul was to the last absolutely untainted by sin, he suffered, in some real way, the results of sin in his own spirit. It was this horrible, unspeakable experience of alienation from God from which he shrank and which gave rise to the agonizing prayer that at the eleventh hour some other method might be found of making atonement for sin.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN PERU

THE SOUTHERN REPUBLIC TAKES THE FIRST STEP LOOKING TOWARD NATIONAL FREEDOM OF WORSHIP

From a Special Correspondent in Lima

PERU is progressing in many directions. When I first visited the country ten years ago a Peruvian friend warned me not to lose myself in delving among Inca ruins and the antiquarian researches which are so fascinating. The ruins, he said, and the evidences of that wonderful Inca civilization were all right in their way, but he wanted me to know that there was a modern Peru which was also worthy of attention. He thought I might overlook the material and moral progress toward which he and some of his associates were seeking to lead their fellow Peruvians.

Now, after ten years, I have seen the abundant evidences of the moral progress. At the time of my first visit Dr. Wood and the other American Protestant missionaries had just gained a point in securing a semblance of toleration for their congregations, which were conceded the privilege of gathering together for worship in halls if these halls bore no signs of being churches. That was as far as they could go under the rigid provision of the Peruvian constitution, which does not allow religious toleration. Even this was declared to be a stretch of authority on the part of the executive officials.

A leading newspaper editor in Lima at the time told me that it would take ten years to secure further concession, but that public sentiment would within that period bring this about. He therefore counseled patience.

The other day I strolled by the Senate Building fronting the Plaza de la Inquisicion, where the statue of Bolivar, the liberator of South America from Spanish dominion, is located. A little while before, the Senate, with only three votes in opposition, had voted the law which is the first step toward amending the constitution so as to provide for freedom of worship. In the Chamber of Deputies I believe there were only four votes in opposition. Within two years another vote will be taken, as is necessary under the Peruvian constitution, and then there will be religious toleration in Peru. I have even heard the prediction that then there will not be a vote in either the Senate or the Chamber of Deputies against this amendment to the constitution.

On the material side there are numerous evidences of beneficial changes, both in Lima and in the port of Callao. There are genuine municipal improvements, especially in the way of sanitation. There are also fine new buildings and broad streets. The Paseo Colon is a very handsome avenue lined by fine residences.

More important than this is the improvement in the sections of the city where the poorer classes live. The public welfare movement has reached Peru. The municipalities of Lima and Callao have been made to realize that they have a large responsibility for the people who compose the bulk of the population. That this is also looked on as a national responsibility is shown by the action of the president. I notice that in the budget he submitted to Congress an appropriation for artisans' dwellings was asked. All these improvements can go forward without Peruvian life losing its many picturesque features. In Lima it is an open-air life, as the mild climate allows. The people congregate in the streets and in the squares or parks almost as if they were their own dwellings. A street restaurant in one of the poorer sections of the city struck me as especially interesting.

THE PUBLIC WELFARE MOVEMENT WILL IMPROVE THESE STREET RESTAURANTS

A disagreeable feature of life in Lima used to be the number of deformed beggars. Some of them are found on the streets now, but the local authorities are gradually leaving no excuse for mendicancy. One custom survives, however, which no

FIERCE FIGHTING IN MEXICO

ONE of the most important battles of the present revolution in Mexico took place on November 25, lasting from early morning until dark. Fifteen thousand men are said to have been engaged. The two armies began skirmishing near Juarez on the afternoon of November 24, the Constitutionalist forces under General Pancho Villa being so disposed as to protect Juarez from attack by the Federalists, who were determined upon its recapture. Under the united commands of General Salazar, Rojas, Carriveo and Land, the Federals opened with an attack on the rebel outposts at Tierra Blanca, and the fighting line quickly spread along the border, opposite Belen and Ystera, some twenty-five miles south of Juarez. Early on the morning of the 25th hot fighting extended along a fifteen-mile front, artillery being used on both sides. Repeatedly the Federals tried to flank the rebels in order to reach Juarez from the west, but every effort failed.

Before the fighting began, Americans were ordered out of Juarez, and some who were found in the streets were escorted by rebel guards to the international bridge and sent across to American territory. The rebel commander explained that this was done in order to protect foreigners in the event of the Constitutionalists meeting defeat.

From a wireless telegraph tower 300 feet high, three miles east of El Paso on the American side, the maneuvers could be distinctly seen with field-glasses, including the retreat of the Federals, who were falling back south of Juarez. On the forenoon of November 25 fighting had ceased at points nearest the border. It was then heaviest at Zaragoza, south of Juarez, and the roar of artillery could be plainly heard across the border. A trainload of wounded reached Juarez at noon, and on its return southward it carried nurses and doctors.

At eight o'clock on November 25, General Villa reported the Federals in "full and shameless flight." He announced the capture of all of the Federal artillery and three of their trains. The Constitutionalists, toward the close of the day's fighting, were hard pressed for lack of ammunition, and many of them are said to have thrown away their guns and fought furiously hand to hand with the Federals. The casualties could not be ascertained reliably, although there were reports that the Federal forces had lost heavily—estimates running from 500 to 1,500—while 700 Federals were taken prisoners by the Constitutionalists, who had subsequently shot a number of the captives. There were reports of the capture of General Salazar, the leading Federal commander, but they could not be confirmed. Among the dead on the rebel side was Colonel Porfirio Talamantes, who was killed in the first night's battle.

Permission was asked to take some of the wounded to El Paso, where they will be regarded as non-combatants. Many of the wounded will doubtless die for the lack of medical attention. The rebels had only three surgeons and practically no surgical supplies. There were some mere children among the wounded. Bodies of dead and dying were scattered all over the battlefield.

During the fighting, traffic on the international bridge was continued with frequent interruptions. People who had no business in Juarez were refused passage. All the hotels of Juarez were emptied of guests and turned into hospitals. A strong body of United States troops, with a machine gun platoon, acted as a border patrol on the American side during the fighting and were kept ready for emergencies.

Villa's brilliant victory has apparently changed the whole rebel plan of campaign. "On to Mexico City!" is now the cry. Villa will follow up his advantage with a force of 12,000 well-armed troops and plenty of artillery and supplies. Chihuahua will be the next objective point. Rebel victories are reported at Vera Cruz and other points in Tamaulipas, and it was claimed on November 28 that the road was now clear to Tampico, the great oil center.

In Mexico City there was little change in the situation. Reports were in circulation that Señor Aldape, ex-cabinet minister, had gone to Paris to endeavor to obtain intervention by the government of France, to which Huerta would be willing to agree. General anxiety was felt for the result of the northern campaign, upon which the fate of Huerta's government largely depended. Some Americans, who had gone to Vera Cruz during the general exodus some time ago, have returned to the capital with their families, among them being the employees of one of the leading American oil companies.

In Washington no material change in regard to the Mexican situation was reported. The administration seems satisfied to await events. Under orders, Rear-Admiral Fletcher, commander of the United States naval forces on the east coast of Mexico, has sailed for Tuxpam and Tampico on the battleship Rhode Island, where there are large British oil interests. No landing of troops is contemplated, however, at either point, assurances having been given by both Federals and Constitutionalists that foreign property will not be damaged. Sir William Tyrrell, private secretary to Sir Edward Grey, the British minister of foreign affairs, who is now in Washington, discussed the Mexican situation with the President and Secretary Bryan, and it is believed that there is a thoroughly cordial understanding between the two governments.

It is hardly necessary to state that all charges of excesses and massacres are denied by the commanders on both sides. It is probably true, nevertheless, that there have been frightful atrocities during the present war the extent of which may never come to light.

Reports are current of barbarous excesses by both sides in the recent fighting. Ciudad Victoria, the beautiful capital of Tamaulipas, was razed almost to the ground. In the fighting in San Salvador 300 men and 100 women are said to have been slain, the latter probably as the result of carrying arms, which many Mexican women are doing in the present war.

On one occasion, a troop train was blown up and the survivors, being seized by the enemy, were flung into the flaming wreckage. In the town of San Geronimo, south of Oaxaca City, the rebels are reported to have killed many of the women who were helping the men in the defense ditches.

After the battle, it is said, six of them were seized, their bodies mutilated, and then they were hung on trees with seventeen men.

attempt is made to destroy. This is Beggars' Day. I had forgotten about the custom until one Saturday morning I saw a policeman part two blind men who had run into each other. Then I noticed that the street was filled with what were literally the lame, the halt and the blind, very pitiful sights many of them. This was the morning on which they had the privilege of going into the shops and stores soliciting alms with the knowledge that there was certain to be a few pennies for them. The Lima shopkeepers always have the small change one day in the week, and the blind and the crippled come before the regular patrons. They receive the gratuity and go their ways, usually getting something also from the people who pass them in the streets.

In some of its customs Lima is changing quite rapidly, but not for the worse. Peruvian women are enjoying a liberty which their mothers never knew. They appear on the streets without servants or escorts, as formerly was the custom, and they make their influence felt in most of the public welfare movements. The Peruvian home life seems to benefit by this greater freedom. I am told that in the girls' schools the range of teaching has been greatly broadened, and that the tendency is to broaden it still further. Formerly, while Peruvian young men went to college in the United States it was rare to hear of a Peruvian girl going to school there. Now there are even Peruvian families who go to the States and take up their residence in order that their daughters, as well as their sons, may have the benefit of an American education.

Under the constitution of Peru, adopted in 1860, the public exercise of any other than the Catholic religion is forbidden. In recent years, however, owing partly to the spread of education and other causes, the desire for a degree of religious toleration has grown until it has become a fixed object in the popular mind. Foreign Protestant churches and mission schools, which on their first introduction met with stubborn opposition from Catholic sources, gradually won their way. During the years from 1909 to 1911 laws were passed enabling non-Catholics to contract civil marriages. At that time there were less than 30,000 professing non-Catholics in the republic.

In the last few years the movement to amend Article Four of the Constitution—which recognizes the Roman Catholic as the established religion and refuses legal toleration to any other religion—has become a vital public question. Elementary education has been under the control of the church, compulsory education not being enforced. The State has contributed to the support of the archbishop, and while the government maintained control of episcopal appointments, the appointees were subject to confirmation by the Pope. Under such conditions Protestant missionary enterprise was exceedingly restricted, but the restrictions have been relaxing gradually. Now that the action of the Senate has given assurance of religious freedom of worship in the near future, the outlook for increased evangelical effort in Peru is better than ever before. It is a great triumph for religious liberty and puts the ancient republic in line with the other progressive South American governments, which have already done away with a state church and put all religions on an equal footing.

THE YEAR'S MOST FAMOUS WEDDING

THE BRIDAL PARTY IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE CEREMONY *

MR. AND MRS. FRANCIS BOWES SAYRE

AMID surroundings to delight the imagination, the long-heralded White House wedding was solemnized at half past four on Tuesday, November 25, in the magnificent East Room. The final touch to the preliminaries, which have held public attention for weeks, was given by a governmental department: the Weather Bureau presented the bride with a perfect day.

Washington awoke on tiptoe Tuesday morning. From then until night-fall the atmosphere was charged with pleasurable excitement. Crowds began to gather about the approaches to the White House early in the afternoon to watch the arrival of distinguished guests. The seventy policemen on duty had little difficulty in keeping the respectful multitude in order. A profusion of white lilies and chrysanthemums interspersed with palms and ferns composed the decorations. The full Marine Band of sixty musicians in brilliant scarlet uniform provided the musical program, the chief number of which was the Lohengrin bridal chorus. The guests, as they assembled to the number of five hundred, including several ecstatic children, formed a most striking scene. Representatives of all the nations of Europe and the Orient were present in court dress of many contrasting colors, and in most cases richly decorated with gold and silver. The justices of the Supreme Court, members of the cabinet and officials of other departments of the government, together with officers of the army and navy in dress uniform, added their note of color. Wives and daughters of many of these dignitaries, all beautifully gowned, accompanied them.

Members and intimate friends of the Wilson and Sayre families formed a distinguished group near the improvised altar of palms and flowers, waiting with the Rev. Sylvester W. Beach of Princeton and the Rev. John Sayre, brother of the bridegroom, for the bridal party.

The bride wore a soft-weave white satin trained gown, draped effect, of pure white with a decided sheen, trimmed with point lace, and embroidered in a floral pattern designed by her mother. Beautiful white filmy shadow lace almost completely covered the dress. Her veil of tulle was held in place by a delicate wreath of orange blossoms. Her bouquet was a shower of lilies of the valley. The bridesmaids carried pink roses and their gowns were of pink charmeuse, the color varying from a deep rose to the palest hydrangea tint.

The bride and her attendants assembled in the state dining room, and proceeded by twos through the corridor and an aisle formed by satin rope, led by Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Robert H. Sayre, escorted by uniformed army officers. The maid of honor, Miss Margaret Wilson, walked immediately before the bride, who leaned on the arm of the President. The entrance of this procession into the East Room was preceded by the appearance of the bridegroom and his best man, Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, who took their positions in front of the raised platform upon which the ceremony took place.

A clear, sweet lugle note announced the appearance of the President and Miss Wilson, bringing a hush throughout the distinguished company. Upon the last note of the official salute, "The President," the band burst forth with the thrilling strains of the wedding march.

At the platform the maids and ushers formed a half circle through which the bridegroom advanced to meet his bride, and they with Miss Margaret Wilson and Dr. Grenfell ascended the platform. The bride and groom took up their position upon a fine pure white vicuña rug presented by the minister of Peru. They knelt for the benediction.

The Rev. Mr. Beach officiated, and the Rev. Mr. Sayre pronounced the benediction. The service was a combination of the Episcopal and Presbyterian forms, and the word "obey" was included by special request of Miss Wilson, the words of the covenant as used being "I, Jessie Woodrow, take thee, Francis Bowes, to be my wedded husband, and promise and covenant before God and these witnesses to be thy faithful and obedient wife in plenty and in want, in joy and in sorrow, in sickness and in health, as long as we both live." After the President, in response to the inquiry: "Who giveth this woman to be married by this man?" had stepped forward and placed his daughter's hand in that of Mr. Sayre, he and Mrs. Wilson stood hand in hand throughout.

The home reception was held in the Blue Room, after which the bride cut the famous wedding cake. Mr. and Mrs. Sayre departed from the capital at eight o'clock in one of the White House automobiles, without revealing where the first days of their honeymoon will be passed. It is reported that they will spend some time abroad, returning early in January to take up their residence at Williamstown, Mass., where Mr. Sayre becomes assistant to the president of Williams College, Professor Harry A. Garfield, son of the martyred President.

The heartfelt good wishes of the whole nation went out to the bride and groom at the hour that consummated their engagement, announced but a few months ago.

There is wide diversity of opinion as to whether Miss Wilson became the thirteenth or the eleventh White House bride. There is no official family Bible in the Executive Mansion in which to find the record of such events. Miss Wilson herself apparently accepted the title, "the thirteenth White House bride," and the chivalry of Americans may insist that that shall be accepted as the official count to date.

Y.M.C.A. AND Y.W.C.A. CAMPAIGN OVERLEAPS THE MARK

TREMENDOUS cheering, a pause, and then a spontaneous uplifting of every voice in the doxology, greeted the announcement to the hundreds of anxious Christian Association workers that the four-million-dollar fund had been subscribed, and oversubscribed by $62,501. Later returns reduced the excess by ten thousand dollars, but failed to reduce the rejoicings by so much as one smile.

The day before, Tuesday, the campaign committee stood face to face with failure by nearly a quarter of a million dollars. To admit defeat would mean the certain loss of hundreds of thousands subscribed conditionally, possibly of as much more which would be canceled on general principles.

The leaders in this extraordinary campaign refused to believe that it had failed, however. Although it appeared as if every possible giver possible to reach had been canvassed, and as though the thousand workers had already come to a full stop, at the call of the chairman to do one more day's service the entire machinery began again to hum and sing at its gigantic task of extracting gold out of clay.

And at eight o'clock Wednesday evening, November 26, the Manhattan Hotel shook with the reverberations of the great machine's joyous closing down, its work accomplished. The final accounting shows that the women outclassed the men in the campaign, the total to their credit being $698,497. The men collected $447,772. The executive committee, composed of men and women, is credited with the balance, near two million of which was subscribed before the actual campaign began.

Probably no other similar effort ever elicited so many large contributions. Gifts of five thousand, twenty-five and even fifty thousand dollars were common. One-thousand-dollar gifts seemed almost the starting point. Small sums, however, played a very important part in the result, and such givers were made to understand that the whole movement depended largely upon them. The odd dollar in the grand total of $4,052,501 was contributed by a janitor who loved the Lord and gave up his Thanksgiving turkey in order to help this cause.

CONSTRAINING LOVE

*A SERMON BY REV. RICHARD BRAUNSTEIN

TEXT: "For the love of Christ constraineth us." II Cor. 5: 14

WHEN Paul speaks, men listen. His speech is the language of one who knows. In another place he says, "I know whom I have believed." It was this knowledge that gave his words the ring of authority and certainty. It was this certainty that sent him everywhither, preaching, exhorting, persuading, suffering and enduring all things. He gives utterance to a holy grammar that comes from a heart on fire. His is a consecrated logic, born of a definite religious experience. Since that immemorial day on the Damascus road, when the heavens were opened before him, and there shone about him a strange light, and he heard the voice speaking to him, saying, "I am Jesus," he was a changed man. A changed man makes a changed message. After that the world knew not Saul the persecutor but Paul the preacher, persuader, and missionary apostle to the Gentiles. Whereas it was all hate it is now all love. It has been said "that a man becomes notorious by his denial of faith, but he becomes strong only through his beliefs." Such was the belief of Paul that he became a prince among preachers. Such was the strength of Paul that when it came to a question of faith he became a giant among men. When he spoke, his world listened. The world always listens when a man has something to say. When his world marveled at his zeal, his devotion, his untiring labors, he gave as his reason the constraining love of Jesus Christ.

Marvelous the record of this man Paul and his labors in behalf of the kingdom! Wonderful the record of those men, twelve and true, that came forth from that upper room speaking with tongues. We are amazed when we read concerning the sending out, by divine commission, of that company of seventy. Almost beyond belief the Acts of the Apostles! Were it not for the fact that new chapters are being added every day we would look back to those days of apostolic times as we are looking back upon the epochs of exciting times of transition in secular history. We read, as the followers of Jesus Christ went everywhither preaching the evangel of the new life, that "even the devils were subject unto them!"

The Secret of Power

Let us pause here and inquire as to what it was that made these men do such wondrous works. What message was it that caused them to sway their fellow beings? What charm did they possess that arrested men in their sinning? What was it that enabled them to cure diseases, cast out demons, make weak men strong, drunken men sober, swearing men reverent, and Magdalens pure? What was the impulse that sent them along earth's dusty lanes and to wretched cities and "into all the world," conquering hard and rebellious hearts, cooling fevered brows, healing sin-sick souls, and making heavy burdens lighter by strengthening humanity's back?

Theirs was not a victory by virtue of strength. They carried no arms and stormed no city. Their weapons were meekness and humility and the Holy Spirit. They did not come as ambassadors from some rich kingdom of earth, but as ambassadors of the kingdom of heaven. This meant that they, like the King whom they served, slept on the trail. But they did know that they were the exponents of a holy commission and the bearers of a divine urgency. They were voices crying in the wilderness, bearing glad tidings to all people. "Their message did not belong to them. They belonged to their message." It was the truth of God using men. They were heralds of eternal life. Theirs was the privilege to tear aside the curtain of ignorance and superstition that clouded the world's vision and give the world an opportunity to see God and recognize him as the Father of mercy and compassion. They had not the power to change the Ethiopian's skin nor to change the color of any man, but they did have the power to change men's hearts and open their eyes to the fact that all were brethren. Great this message of love that had for its program the grace of forgiving one's enemies, not seven times, but seventy times seven! Great indeed was this message of love that sent Morrison to China, Mackey to Uganda, Carey to India, and David Livingstone to Africa, after seeing the "smoke of a thousand villages where no missionary had ever been!" God grant that others may see the pillar of smoke that lured Livingstone and caused him to do heroic work for the kingdom! Wonderful this love that sent Wesley to the street corners and the coal mines because he "felt his heart strangely warmed." Constraining love sent General Booth to the slums of London and Samuel H. Hadley to the slums of New York. Constraining love sent Wilfred Grenfell to Labrador to toil, and to preach, and to minister with book and balm to the humble fisherfolk, and to this region of cold and snow, ice and wind went this man because, as he said, "What a man does for the love of God he does differently."

The Joy of Telling the Story

Brave men and women are going, will continue to go to the lonely places and fringes of civilization, forsaking all, houses and lands and brethren, for the joy of telling to the world the wonderful old story, and illustrating it with their lives. Well they know that this story is the masterpiece of the ages and the Author divine. Thousands of pulpits are endeavoring to tell the glad tidings and put it in the language of the people, so that all hearts may grasp its meaning. But no tongue is eloquent enough, no intellect is keen enough to master it in its entirety, and pens are feeble when they would attempt its description. Charles Wesley tried to express it in song when he wrote, "Love divine, all love excelling"; saintly George Matheson almost grasped it when he sang, "O love that will not let me go." Count Zinzendorf tried to live it when he organized the "Society of the Grain of Mustard Seed," which had for the first article of its constitution these words: "The members of our society will love the whole human race." John preached it in an effectual way when he admonished: "Little children, love one another." The secret of Gladstone's godliness is seen in the significant line found in his diary: "In practice the great end is that the love of God may become the habit of my soul." The poet felt it deeply when he gave to the world these lines:

For the love of God is broader than the measure of man's mind,
And the heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind.

Henry Moorehouse, the English preacher, while delivering a series of seven expositions on this theme in Moody's church, summed up his week's sermons, saying: "My friends, for a whole week I have been trying to tell you how much God loves you, but I cannot do it with this poor stammering tongue. If I could borrow Jacob's ladder and climb up into heaven and ask Gabriel to tell me how much the heavenly Father loves the world, all he could say would be, 'God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.'"

The roar of cannon and din of battle was not so loud and the glory of conquest so alluring to Napoleon that he could not hear the voice of this love. Whatever else may be said of this man and his dream of empire and feverish strivings for the plaudits and admiration of the crowds, hailing him as emperor, he must needs descend from his pedestal and bend the knee before the lowly Nazarene and recognize him as Lord of lords and King of kings. One day, while in conversation with Count Montholen at St. Helena, he said: "Alexander and Cæsar and I have founded great empires, but upon what did these creations of our genius depend? Upon force! Jesus alone founded his empire on love, and to-day millions would die for him. I think I understand human nature, and I tell you all these were men and I am a man. I have inspired multitudes with such a devotion that they would die for me, but to do this it was necessary that I should be visibly present with the electric influence of my look and my word; across the chasm of eighteen hundred years Jesus Christ makes a demand which is above all others difficult to satisfy. He asks for that which a philosopher may often seek in vain at the hands of his friends, or a father of his children, or a bride of her spouse, or a man of his brother. He asks for the human heart. He will have it entirely to hi self, and his demand is granted. Wonderful! defiance of time and space the soul of man with its powers becomes an annexation to the empire Christ. This it is which proves to me quite co clusively the divinity of Jesus Christ."

We stand in awe when we view the achievemen of scientists, and we marvel when we read of t power of radium. There is something thrilling the fact that men harness the forces of the mou tain stream to their wheels and grind their corn, a saw their giant trees, and turn their lathes. The is something majestic in the iron monster th speeds us across the continent, and it seems as if w are viewing something superhuman as some gre ship steams into the harbor, having crossed t ocean in six or five days. We do not understand th mystery, but we can appreciate the electric curre that wings our messages of greeting and brings th world to our door, and lights our city, and propel our cars. We stand gazing into the heavens, spel bound, as some man soars across the houses and ri ers and forests, as if gifted with an eagle's wing And we call these wonder-signs "power."

But greater than all is the power of God. Tha energetic propelling force of love, let loose on earth harnessed to the hearts of men and women, and do ing things, working miracles, changing chaos int order, planting trees of healing in the desert place of man's path, and opening springs of refreshmen in the barren spots of man's existence. Doing things, accomplishing great tasks, like the hidde power of the mountain streams, like the power o steam, like the current of electricity. This wonder ful power of God is a lifting power. It not alon lifts ideas and ideals and the world to a highe plane of thought and conduct, but through its hun dred and one agencies it lifts the stone of the fiel and the wood of the forest, and lo! we have a hospi tal for earth's ills and a house of refuge for earth' weary and schools and colleges for the dispellin of ignorance and the advancement of learning.

In Due Time, the King

Through this power of God some Angelo swings across the heavens a great dome named St. Peter's, or some Christopher Wren builds a cathedral. It lifts the artist's brush and we have given to us from lifeless pigments warm saints and Madonnas. It lifts the sculptor's chisel, and lo! there comes forth from cold and inanimate marble the figure of some angel, pulsing, throbbing, glowing as it were with the blood of life, and we feast our eyes upon her ravishing beauty, or we stand in admiration before the likeness of some apostle. It gives inspiration to the author's pen, and some Milton gives to the world a description of heaven, or the youth of our land is thrilled by the biography of earth's great and is led to emulation. It lends wings to the poet's muse, and in his soaring to the heights, he bids us go with him that he may show us the beautiful. It lends eloquence to the preacher's tongue and fire to his eye, and conviction to his speech, and some Paul, by holy grammar, or Chrysostom by holy speech is wooing mortals into the kingdom. Sinners' hearts are stirred by the exhortation of a Savonarola, by the clear call to duty of some Bourdaloue, or the passionate appeal of a Whitefield. This divine power builds the family altar and surrounds the fireside with the tenets of parental and priestly counsel. It teaches youth the beauty of holiness, the mystery of godliness, and importance of character building. Thus it gives to them a vision of that future day when they, too, shall build a home which will be a symbol of that perfect home in the Father's house, when the families of earth shall be established in the bosom of the Eternal; when pain and sorrow, separation and tears will no longer be experienced, and the inconsistencies of life be forgotten.

That the world can be saved by love and will be saved by love can be realized when we take time to study. Everywhere there is a changing order. The world is in a state of transition. The Man of Galilee is the Man of the hour. China, Japan, Korea, Africa—all nations are singing glories and

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, December 14. Numbers 32: 16-23. "Be sure your sin will find you out." Unforgiven sin is always a minister of destruction. We cannot put sin away as we might hide a pebble in a drawer. We might conceal a coin in our pocket, but could we hide the germ of cholera or smallpox? The cholera germ would find us out, and so would the germ of smallpox. And sin is a germ, a deadly germ, and, once it is born, there is nothing can destroy it but the infinite grace of God.

So that when we can hide cholera germs with impunity we can try to hide the loathsome germs of sin. Where can we hide them? They are deeply planted in our souls, and they are spreading "as doth a gangrene." They are eating away our moral powers, consuming the energy which ought to be hallowed in strong and peaceful service. The germ of falsehood devours inconceivable treasure, and so does every other form of transgression. Every germ will find us out!

But the grace of God can rid us of even these deadly germs. "Purge me with hyssop and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." "Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquities and cleanse me from my sins."

MONDAY, December 15. John 1: 1-18. "In Him was life." I have heard men speak of "wanting to see a bit of life," and I found that what they meant was to see a bit of death. It is as if a man should go to the hospital to see a bit of health, or as if he should go to a gory battlefield to see the human frame. It is like going to a refuse-heap to see a bit of garden. "Life" is not found in fields of license; it is not found among the wild oats of a dissipated youth. "Life" is found only in Christ, and if we want to see a bit of life we must go to him.

"In him was life"; and that not merely to be looked at but to be shared. He is the well to which everybody can bring his pitcher and take it away filled. And my pitcher is just my need. "All the fitness he requires is to feel our need of him." The Life is all-sufficient for the needs of the race. This Life can vitalize all that is withered and dead; it can make decrepit walls muscular and mighty, and it can transfigure the leper with the glow and purity of perfect health.

Thou of life the Fountain art;
Freely let me take of thee!

TUESDAY, December 16. I John 1: 1-7. I have just come out of a gloomy room into a sunny room to write these words. I had my choice. I could have stayed in the somber room, but I choose to come into the sun-lit room, and the warm, cheering beams are even now falling upon my page. "Walk in the light!" And I make my choice, and how often I choose to walk without Christ in the unfertilizing and unfruitful gloom of self-will! In the light of the Lord I could have a garden of Eden; how often I choose the dingy wilderness where I can grow neither flowers nor fruits!

"Walk in the light." The Lord's companionship always makes the sunny side of the street. It may be that the way is rough and stony and difficult, but in his company there is light that never fails, compared with which the world's noontide is only as the gloomiest night. And the souls that "walk in the light" gather "sacred sweets" all along the way. Heavenly fruits grow for "the children of light," fruits of love, and joy, and peace, and the favored pilgrim plucks them as he goes along. "All I find in Jesus." The way of light is the way of delight, and "the joy of the Lord is our strength."

WEDNESDAY, December 17. Isaiah 9: 1-7. It is a lonely and a chilling experience to sit in the darkness. And the gloom and the cold are all the more intense when there is death in the house. In such conditions we are in great need of light and fire.

And that is how the children of men were feeling before the Saviour came. They "sat in darkness" and in "the shadow of death." The world was cold, and sin and death were in it, and they longed for light and cheer. And "the great Light came," and his wonderful Presence not only illumines the house but banishes the fear of sin and death. "They that dwelt in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined."

Where can we get this living light except in the Lord Jesus Christ? Everything else is candle-light! It fails us in the midnight. It flickers amid conflicting currents. It goes out in the rough blast. The light of art and of literature fails me when I need them most. When I sit in the darkness, with death in the house, these kindly ministers have no effective beams. I turn to the Master and he shines upon me, and it is daybreak in the soul!

THURSDAY, December 18. Hebrews 1: 1-8. The Lord Jesus is the "brightness of the Father's glory," but so tempered to our eyes that we can look upon it without being consumed. It is like the colored lens through which we gaze at the sun; the "burning bliss" is mediated through human shades. We are able to look at Jesus, and the vision is surpassingly wonderful, but more marvelous glory waits to be unveiled. Some day the subduing and softening shades will be removed, the preparatory discipline will be ended, we shall gaze upon the unutterable glory of the Lord, and we "shall know even as we have been known."

But now the "brightness" is for the needs of our pilgrimage. It will come into our homes like gentle sunshine and will throw its cheery beams over all the household fellowships. It will light up our places of business and transfigure common labor with divine relationships. It will illumine all the ordinary roads of life, the way up hill, the way down hill, the way that leads to the marriage altar, and the way that leads to the grave. "I am the light of the world." "In thy light shall we see light."

FRIDAY, December 19. Luke 2: 8-20. The birth of the Saviour had a threefold announcement. It was announced to aged Simeon, the worshiper in the temple. It was announced to wise men, busily studying the signs of the times. It was announced to workingmen, engaged in humble employment upon the hills. The evangel carried its wonderful music into all our many-sided life, to worshiper, student, and workman, and in its very breadth proclaimed our Saviour's sufficiency for all the needs of body, mind and soul.

And so the shepherds had the visit of the angels. "The glory of the Lord" shone upon the field of their labor, and in that light their work was forever sanctified. And the same glory will fall upon thy field and mine, giving the consecrating gleam to our daily work. To be conscious of that glory is to transform work into worship, and the way of drudgery into the highway of the Lord. "Labor is rest, and toil is sweet, when thou, my God, art there." The Lord of Christmastide entered into our life by lowly doors. And still he seeks the lowly doors, the door of the workshop, the door of the chamber, and all the unobtrusive doors of human friendship and regard.

SATURDAY, December 20. Matthew 2: 1-11. "The star . . . went before them till it came and stood over where the young child was." They followed the star and it led them to Christ. And we, too, have our stars which, if we follow, will bring us into the same blessed Presence. There are the stars of promise. Never a twilight falls upon us without these radiant ministers appearing and shedding their gentle beams. And there is the star of love, blazing away in every night-sky, and always visible to the pilgrim's eye. "The way of love" is ever the way to the Lord. And there is the star of duty, gleaming upon us in the darkest night. And "the path of duty is the way to glory." And then there is the star of hope!

Star of hope! gleam o'er the billow!

And these are the kindly ministers of the Lord Jesus, and if we carefully and prayerfully follow them they will assuredly lead us into his holy and blessed communion. He never leaves himself without a witness. If we follow the light we have, it will most certainly guide us into fuller light. "Believe in the light that ye may be the children of light."

CONSTRAINING LOVE

doxologies. A thousand bells are ringing, proclaiming victory. The advancing hosts of God are leaving behind them shattered traditions of superstition, broken idols and barriers and open doors. No, we have not followed cunningly devised fables. No, we have not followed the will-o'-the-wisp of a Utopian dream, or the lurings of a distorted imagination. We believe that Jesus Christ is a reality. We believe that where two or three, or two or three hundred, are gathered together in his name, there he is also. We believe that he is Emmanuel —God with us. The same Jesus of the manger, the garden, the cross, and the empty tomb. Therefore, we are confident that if he be lifted up he will draw all men unto him! So let us lift him up that a dying world may behold him and live. Like Robert Hale of Carr's Lane, let us announce every Sabbath morning an Easter hymn so that the world may know that he is risen. The same Jesus who wept over Jerusalem is weeping to-day over New York and Chicago, Paris and London. The great cities need him. The country needs him. The world must have him! We believe with the ancient prophet that if we continue to preach him the time will come when "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." Dr. Briggs said: "What is constantly affirmed and never denied is likely to be believed." Therefore, let us dispel the world's doubting by affirming that "God is love," manifested in Jesus Christ. We affirm at this time that at the name of Jesus every knee will bow. We affirm that in due time Jesus Christ will be King. We are aware of our imperfect lives and we know that as yet there are no perfect Christians. We are continually being reminded of this—also of the errors and imperfections of the church. To which we make answer that to-morrow there will be perfect Christian men and women, building a perfect church. In the meantime the world is growing better. The reason why it is not any better than it is is because man cannot comprehend the length and breadth, the height and depth of redemption. We are standing on our watch-tower of prayer, looking for to-morrow. The watchman of faith is with us and he tells us it is coming. To-morrow! God's word will not return unto him void. To-morrow! The desert will bloom as the rose. To-morrow! Perfect love will have prevailed and Jesus Christ will have come unto his own. It is yet night. It is but three o'clock. Faint streaks are beginning to stream over the eastern horizon. Oh, ye men and women of faith, impelled by constraining love, labor on in prayer, and petition God to send the dawn.

President Wilson at Mass

(From the New York Times, November 28, 1913.)

WASHINGTON, November 27.—Peace among the nations of the Western Hemisphere was the keynote of the sermon at the annual Pan-American Thanksgiving mass celebrated to-day at St. Patrick's Church, and the luncheon that followed at the rectory. It was attended by President Wilson, Mrs. Wilson and the Misses Wilson, the Chief Justice of the United States and Mrs. White, Associate Justice and Mrs. McKenna, Secretary Bryan and other members of the cabinet and their wives, the Speaker of the House and Mrs. Clark, ex-Speaker Cannon and Miss Cannon, Admiral and Mrs. Dewey, a host of Senators and Representatives, most of them accompanied by their families, and the Latin-American diplomatic corps.

The annual Pan-American Thanksgiving mass has become a notable occasion in Washington, and it is customary for the President and most of the high officers of the government to attend. To the left of the altar sat His Eminence James Cardinal Gibbons, and beside him the Right Rev. Charles W. Currier, bishop of Matanzas, Cuba.

The church was elaborately decorated with American and Pan-American flags and an orchestra and chorus rendered the musical program. A dove of peace holding together in its beak the flag of the United States and that of the Pan-American Union symbolized the peaceful union between the nations of the Western Hemisphere, for which prayers were offered. In view of the relations between two of the American republics, the United States and Mexico, the sermon of Bishop Currier had a deep significance to those present.

Monsignor Russell presided at the luncheon. Around him sat Cardinal Gibbons, Chief Justice White, Justice McKenna, Secretary Bryan, Attorney General McReynolds, Postmaster General Burleson, Secretary Daniels, Secretary Lane, Secretary Houston, Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to the President; Ambassador Da Gama of Brazil, the ministers of the Latin-American republics, John Barrett, director general of the Pan-American Bureau; ex-Postmaster General Wynne, Surgeon Blue, Brigadier General McIntyre, Chief Judge Knapp of the Commerce Court, and many others.

(From the New York World, November 28.)

WASHINGTON, November 27.—President Wilson, members of his cabinet and the Supreme Court and diplomats from every republic of Central and South America to-day attended the Pan-American mass at St. Patrick's Catholic Church, which has marked every Thanksgiving Day for the last six years. There were fully 1,500 worshipers inside the building, and several hundred outside. Cardinal Gibbons was present. On the stroke of eleven o'clock the orchestra in the choir loft began to sing "The Star-spangled Banner," and President Wilson came down the aisle, escorted by Monsignor Russell, rector of St. Patrick's, and by Secretary Tumulty and Dr. Grayson. The President was shown to the front pew on the left side of the aisle.

(From the New York Tribune, November 28.)

WASHINGTON, November 27.—The fourth annual Pan-American Thanksgiving mass was celebrated to-day at eleven o'clock at St. Patrick's Church in the presence of the President, the Secretary of State and several other members of the Cabinet, Chief Justice White and Justice McKenna of the Supreme Court and the members of the diplomatic corps from the Latin-American countries.

President Wilson ignored the protests of the Protestant clergy of Washington by attending the service, but the precedent was set by President Taft. For several days the President had been urged not to attend despite the fact that the announcement was made several weeks ago that he had expressed his intention of being present at the ceremony.

From the New York Herald (Washington despatch), November 28.

President Wilson to-day [November 27] joined the diplomatists of the Central and South American republics in Thanksgiving. With Secretary of State Bryan and other cabinet officers, and more than a score of envoys from other lands, he attended the sixth annual Pan-American Thanksgiving mass at St. Patrick's Catholic Church. Fifteen hundred persons crowded the church, while hundreds of others jammed the doors in a fruitless effort to gain entrance.

His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons aided in the service. The members of the cabinet, Chief Justice White and Justice McKenna of the Supreme Court of the United States, Senators and Representatives in Congress attended, with the diplomatists, who were in brilliant costumes.

Worth While

THIS is the season when most of us count our blessings. There are many readers of this journal who, we believe, will feel a glow of gratitude in their hearts when they read the remarkably interesting letters from China which we publish on another page. For several years past these friends have been giving their loving support to hundreds of orphan boys and girls in that ancient land. Now comes the welcome news from the missionaries that this year a number of these young people have publicly dedicated themselves to the service of the Gospel and have entered upon the first stages of a career which may be productive of far-reaching results that could not have been foreseen by their patrons, or even by the missionaries themselves.

Christ compared the kingdom of heaven to a grain of mustard seed, which, though the smallest of seeds, became one of the greatest of trees, in whose branches the birds of the air found shelter. The gifts and prayers of these good friends in America, sown in China a few years ago, are now finding prolific multiplication. They felt that they must do something worth while for Christ; but in equipping these little ones for the battle of life they could not have thought of such a glorious result as this. What will be the outcome of the lives of these young converts? They will go out among their own people and sow the seed, each one raising new converts, who will scatter the seed in their turn, and so, continuously multiplying, they will spread the Gospel mightily and win precious souls. Have you ever doubted whether the care and love and generosity you have expended upon the children of China were worth while? You need doubt no longer, but hold it as a work divinely approved.

In Bombay a few weeks ago, Dr. Capen told the story of the spiritual transformation of Hawaii. It began with a little group of consecrated men and women here in America, who helped to equip a few missionaries to give the Gospel to the people of those islands—a people so degraded that the white men wondered if they were really human. It looked like a forlorn hope, but the few grains of mustard seed took root. Now the Hawaiians are not only completely Christianized, having churches, colleges, schools, hospitals and modern homes, but they are themselves sending out missionaries to other lands. To-day, a single school in Honolulu supports five missionaries in foreign service. All this mighty work had its genesis in the hearts of a few godly people, who felt that they must do something worth while for Christ. When we labor for him, seeking not our own glory and honor but his, he will never suffer the work to fail.

Mothers' Pensions in Operation

FOR something less than half a year the Mothers' Pension Law passed by the legislature of the State of Washington has been in operation. An idea of the results of this new experiment is furnished by the Seattle Post Intelligencer. It has filled the children's homes, that journal says, almost to their limit "through the giving up to institutional charge of the children of unsuccessful pension applicants. Before the passage of the law, mothers strove to hold the children of the family together, knowing that the law granted an allowance for every child; but when the mothers learned that only those in absolute penury would be granted pensions, the family breakup began. Fraudulent representation and even perjury were detected in a number of cases. Then it was learned, besides, that many mothers who needed and desired aid could not bring themselves to the point of asking it publicly. It is the uniform experience of those engaged in philanthropic work that the "silent sufferers"—those who shrink from publicity—are usually not only numerous but meritorious. It is quite evident that those States which contemplate a Mothers' Pension Act have a good deal of hard work before them, if such a law is to be administered wisely and well and in the interest of the really deserving.

Youth and Age in the Church

THE general discussion concerning church efficiency and the decline of church influence is taking a wide range. Among the multitude of suggestions that have been made, up to the present time we have not seen one which lays sufficient stress upon the neglect in many churches of children and the aged. In the church, as in business, the commercial spirit is too often dominant, and as the old members are beyond the point where they could be used effectively as organizers, and the younger element lacks the necessary business experience, they are too often left out in the reckoning. Thus the burden falls on the members of middle age. There is a tendency to overlook youth and age, the periods of life when faith is strongest. The young are not troubled with doubts; their belief is clear and sincere; they often have finer spiritual vision than can come to the busy adult who is immersed in the material struggle of life. It is in a sense the same with the aged. Their battle is well-nigh over and their eyes are turned toward the eternal gates. Their perspective of the world and its gifts is a truer one than that of the man in mid-life, and the veil that hides the future becomes more and more transparent.

There is no one who can bring to the church the fruits of ripe experience like the aged saint. If all three elements were considered—youth, mid-life and old age—the balance would be better preserved; we would not be so apt to surrender the spiritual for the material view, and the church would be more of a living institution, as it was designed to be. Let us strive to bring back the full spiritual tone to the church, and it will do better service for God and man.

A Sea Captain Converted

REV. WILLIAM G. JONES, a missionary of the New York Bible Society to the seamen of the New York City port, had an interview recently with a captain on board his hooner, which was full of interest. The vessel d been visited by the misionary several times, but had never been able to see the captain. He had ard that the man did not believe in the Bible or Christ, and hence he was the more anxious to id him. The other day after having given each an on board a copy of the Bible, the missionary ld the mate he very much desired to see the comander of the vessel. With great hesitation and oubt the mate went to find him, and came back ith an invitation to the missionary to go to the aptain's room. The captain told him that he had daughter sixteen years old who was the idol of is heart, and that she was lying dangerously ill, overing between life and death. He said he felt a eed of some higher help for her and himself, hough up to this time he had not believed in the ible or in prayer. The missionary explained the ible and Christ, and the access to the Father by im, and as the two knelt in prayer together, God ame in saving grace to the man. The missionary wo days after went down to the ship to say good-by o the men about to sail, and the captain told him e believed God heard their rayer for the restoration f his daughter as well as or his own conversion, nd that he was going on is long voyage with a ight heart, and a new world discovered in his own soul. As an evidence of the genuineness of his conviction he gave the misionary $2 to "help the cause along." What a beautiful thing it is to send out a free Bible, and those to expound it who know what it means! How often affliction softens the heart of unbelief, and makes it responsive to the entreaties of Infinite Love! The man with the Bible in his hand bringing the sea captain to Christ verifies the truth of the psalmist:

The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. (Ps. 19: 7.)

Prosperous Alaska

THE reports of the United States Government on the education, the fishery, and fur industries of Alaska, recently printed, are very encouraging. The schools for the natives reach all the way from the southern extremity of the territory below Sitka to Point Barrow, on the Arctic Ocean. There are schools even in Unalaska and Atka in the Aleutian chain. When the barriers of snow, ice, and primitive roads are taken into account it is surprising that the school attendance is 1,805 out of a possible 4,018. There are 109 teachers, of whom 14 are natives. There are in that territory 38,476 reindeer, 24,068 of them in the hands of native owners, and they are valued at $601,700. The fifty-four herds in line would stretch 5,000 miles. The salmon canned last year was worth over $16,000,000, which is an amount more than twice as much as Mr. Seward paid Russia for all of Alaska. The Yukon Valley and other districts continue their yield of gold, and the 600,000 square miles of territory secured by friendly purchase, March 30, 1867, under the magic touch of American enterprise will become an empire in itself. Of Alaska can be said what was written of Havilah:

Havilah, where there is gold; and the gold of that land is good. (Gen. 2: 11, 12.)

A World City Proposal

ON DECEMBER 5 there was to be held a meeting at the Sorbonne, Paris, in behalf of the creation of an international city, devoted to all forms of human progress. It was thought that ten thousand persons to whom invitations had been sent, including President Poincaré, would attend the meeting. The originator of the idea is Hendrik Christian Andersen, an American sculptor residing in Rome. The American State Department has manifested a keen interest in the idea, and it is understood that an executive order has been placed in the hands of all American ambassadors, directing them to aid Mr. Anderson in every way that seems feasible. Special audiences with the Kaiser and the king of England are being arranged for. Seventy-nine international organizations have signified their support. The probable cost of the World City will be $100,000,000. Possible sites have been studied on the New Jersey coast, the Dutch coast, near The Hague; the Riviera, near Cannes; Tervueren, near Brussels, near Bern, near Paris; the Marmora coast near Constantinople, and the Mediterranean coast near Rome. This project is the expression of the tendency to world unity. An international city of peace and virtue and plenty would be one step toward the universal city into which John looked:

And I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God. (Rev. 3: 12.)

Jews Retranslating Their Bible

ISAAC LEESER, who died in 1868, came to this country as a clerk and also as a lay-teacher in the Jewish church. He found that there was no English translation of the Hebrew Bible, and so, without relaxing his work as a clerk and lay-teacher he translated the Hebrew Bible into English, and that Bible at the present time is the only English translation. Leeser was not a technical scholar, and, useful as his translation of the Bible has been, the Jewish Publication Society believed a scholarly work was required; and four or five years ago, on its own initiative, it selected seven representative scholars and appointed them a board of Bible editors to translate the Hebrew Scriptures into English. Five books of the Bible, including Isaiah, have now been completed, and it is estimated that the entire work may occupy five to ten years from its start. What a marvelous interest we all have in the revision of the Hebrew Bible! God's Word in the Law of Moses was in the sole custody of the Jews for so many centuries. Only one copy was allowed to exist, and when that was thumbed and time-worn, it was carefully copied by the scribes. The Almighty told his nation plainly that if it should ever neglect or depart from the Book, the direst calamity would be visited upon it. In an evil hour the Book was lost, and the nation, without a Bible, went down into the night of idolatry, vice and ruin. Idols were set up even in the Lord's house. The good King Josiah sent Hilkiah, the high priest, and Shaphan, the scribe, up to the temple to get the money collected and pay the men for work in repairing the Lord's house, when Hilkiah discovered in a secret place the lost book of Moses, and he ran to the scribe in a frenzy of delight, crying, "I have found the Book!" and the scribe ran in to the king with the Book in his hand, crying, "The high priest has bidden me bring you the Book he found." Josiah was overcome with joy. He ordered that the priests, the Levites, and all the people should assemble at Jerusalem in the temple, and he took the lost Book and read it to them. He then stood on a pulpit and made all the people take an oath with him to be loyal to Jehovah and he tore the idols and their priests out of the temple and of the land. The books of Moses found in the temple are the same ones the Jewish scholars are translating into English for practical use; they are the foundation of the Jewish faith and of the Christian faith as well. Those who treat the Old Testament slightingly should remember that it was of them Jesus said:

Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me. (John 5: 39.)

TRANSLATORS OF THE HEBREW BIBLE

FIVE of the seven distinguished Jewish scholars now translating the Hebrew Bible into English. From left to right: Professor M. L. Margolies, Dropsie College; Dr. David Phillipson, rabbi, Cincinnati; Professor Solomon Schechter, president Jewish Theological Seminary, New York; Dr. Cyrus Adler, president Dropsie College, Philadelphia; Dr. Samuel Schulman, rabbi Temple Beth-el, New York. Our Fabulous Farming Possibilities

WHEN we look at the wheat and corn exported from our country; at the herds of cattle, sheep and hogs raised each year, which, in a line single file, would reach seven times around the globe; at the mammoth cotton yield that aids in preserving the balance of trade, and at the other great crops at harvest time, we feel very proud of our agricultural success. But when we look at the productive farming of some European countries, we see how far we are behind them. Mr. Bauwens, inspector general of agriculture of Belgium, has made a tour of this country, studying its agriculture and comparing it with that in his home land. In Belgium every acre maintains its man. The land is farmed intensively and yields three crops a year. In this country nearly half of the land may be called waste land; in Belgium there is almost no waste land. Mr. Bauwens visited Wisconsin and made comparisons. That State has 56,040 square miles, while Belgium has only 11,273 square miles. But the population of Wisconsin is 2,333,860, while that of Belgium is 7,074,910. The United States alone, if necessary, could feed and clothe the present population of the earth for untold generations, and would only have to equal Belgium in utilizing waste land and in intensive farming to do so. In the face of these fabulous farming possibilities, these words of the psalmist seem to be appropriate:

He hath not dealt so with any nation. (Ps. 147: 20.)

Parents Starve Their Babe

A FATHER and mother living on Pacific Avenue, Jersey City, N. J., so neglected their baby that it died of starvation. The two older children were reduced to exhaustion without food, but they were better able to stand the long fast than the baby was. The parents did not intend to starve their child, they were themselves unconscious from intoxication. The father came home on a drunken debauch, and the mother joined him in it; and in their stupor, filth, and indescribable degradation the sweet little baby was allowed to die for the want of a mother's care. The angels took the soul of the little one to the paradise of heaven and the officers of the law took the father and mother to the penitentiary, and the two older children to an institution. This picture, unspeaakbly sad, is not more so than that of parents who provide bountifully for the bodies of their children with food and raiment, and teach them the arts of social life, but neglect their education, withhold from them moral and spiritual truth, and thus starve their souls. The divine command to motherhood to-day is that which the princess gave to the mother of the great lawgiver:

Take this child away, and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages. (Ex. 2: 9.)

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

At the Spanish Court

OUR ambassador to Spain, the first since the Spanish-American War, Hon. Joseph Edward Willard, has presented his credentials. This function in Spain is attended with much ceremony. A state carriage, drawn by six caparisoned horses with outriders and eight running footmen in livery, conveys the minister to the palace. There he is met by the master of ceremonies and the foreign minister, and by the latter is presented to the king in the presence of a brilliant assembly. It is stated that American ambassadors are noted for the tranquillity with which they pass through such ordeals. Miss Belle W. Willard, eldest daughter of the ambassador, has been very graciously received by Spanish society.

Cold Storage Investigation

DELIBERATE destruction of eggs by the carload, rather than allow them to go on sale and thereby reduce the retail price, is charged against the "egg trust" by Representative K. D. McKellar of Tennessee. Mr. McKellar seeks a Congressional investigation of cold storage tactics, and has gathered data which he claims will prove that the cold storage business is often conducted dishonestly. He seeks by legislation to prohibit interstate shipment of perishable foodstuffs that have been in cold storage longer than three months. The destroyed eggs were on their way to warehouses which had become taxed to their capacity. The Housewives' League is also interested in this same subject, and is instituting egg boycotts throughout the country. Baltimore, Chicago, Cleveland, Atlantic City and other cities have experienced such boycotts with the slogan, "No eggs over thirty cents." The women of the league are confident of arousing a nation-wide movement to reduce the cost of food necessities. November 24 United States Attorney General McReynolds ordered a Federal investigation into the causes of high prices for cold storage foodstuffs with a view to possible action by the Department of Justice.

Panama Canal Prospects

NOVEMBER 17 was hailed as a new historic date because of the passage of an official vessel through the Panama Canal. The date that history will record as witnessing the conquering of the Isthmus of Panama is still in the future, however. Colonel George W. Goethals, chief engineer, in his annual report just submitted, neither sets a definite date for the formal opening, nor predicts when the canal will be in operation. The opinion of geologists last year that the slides were practically past because nearly all loose surface soil and stone had slid off the great ridges of basalt rock, which would thereafter act as barriers to further slides, has been reversed by nature, and two million cubic yards of material closed up the Culebra Cut when it was about to be pronounced finished. Other slides have occurred, and, while the great project is expected to be completed by January 1, 1915, that is dependent upon the complete overcoming of the slides. In other respects the progress is satisfactory. The great gates at Gatun were swung in one minute and fifty seconds for each leaf, and the heavy movable chains to prevent vessels not under control from crashing into the docks have demonstrated their ability to do so. The fortifying of the canal is advancing, and but for the jealous sulking of Nature, the canal would be completed in advance of the original expectation. Thus far about $360,000,000 has been expended.

Wireless to Help Railroading

THE Lackawanna Railroad has just conducted successful experiments with wireless apparatus on trains running fifty miles an hour. The experiments took on a decidedly practical form when a conductor became ill and the ordinary station delay to make a change was obviated by wireless message, the relay conductor meeting the train as it drew in. An additional coach to accommodate an unusual crowd of passengers was also secured by wireless without the delay usually caused, and other similar services were rendered. Messages were also sent a distance of sixty miles from one train to another, mountains intervening. The Lackawanna's superintendent of telegraph, L. B. Foley, prophesies that wireless will revolutionize railroading and will increase the safety and convenience of traveling 100 per cent. Kept in touch with trains by wireless, despatchers can stop them anywhere to prevent accident. The grounding of the current is done through the rail, and the ordinary lighting dynamos are used. The great problem is to get the train instrument, with an aerial only two feet above the roof of the car, in tune with the high aerial at the station necessary for messages to be sent a distance. When that difficulty is overcome, wireless service on running trains may become general in this country. A few European railroads have tried and proved the wireless, but English railroad men say the system will be of no advantage in that country over existing methods.

The Booths Reconciled

A NOTEWORTHY event in the visit here of General Bramwell Booth of the Salvation Army is the reconciliation with his brother, General Ballington Booth, commander-in-chief of the Volunteers of America. The long estrangement of these brothers was brought to an end in a quite natural manner, but amalgamation of the two organizations is not expected to follow. Rumors to the effect that Commander Eva Booth would leave the Salvation Army work in this country to take up the work abroad are declared unfounded. The presence of General Bramwell Booth is expected to result in a large increase of public interest in the organization. He himself stated that he is chiefly after American Army officers for India and China.

Railroads Want to Raise Rates

THE railroads claim that they cannot conduct their business at a profit upon an income smaller than the outgo, and intimate that, if the Federal Government wishes to experiment along that hazardous line, the opportunity is at hand. As predicted in connection with reports of the recent Strike Arbitration Commission award, giving the trainmen six million dollars increase in pay, the Eastern roads now appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant an increase of five per cent. in the freight rates. This would increase annual receipts about $50,000,000. Hearings before the commission began on November 24, and it will take several weeks to determine the merits of the appeal in order to give counsel for the commission and shippers opportunity to study the case and present their views.

Three years ago the Interstate Commerce Commission decided that there was no evidence of a necessity for higher rates, and no probability of such necessity in the future. The railroads offer to show by stupendous figures that this forecast was erroneous. It is pointed out that gross earnings for 1913 amount to $1,424,119,000, an increase of $186,775,000 over 1910; whereas expenses and taxes amount to $1,087,365,000, an increase over 1910 of $203,087,000. The property investment in the same period has leaped from $5,620,000,000 to $6,280,000,000, an increase of 11.74 per cent. The forty-nine Eastern companies concerned earned for the last year $1,424,000,000. Their earnings after deducting expenses and taxes were $347,000,000; and after payment of interest on funded debt, $206,000,000, out of which net income dividends of 5.10 per cent. on the capital invested were declared, amounting to $130,000,000. In 1910 these companies showed net operating income equal to 6.28 per cent. on their property investment; but in 1913 this percentage dropped to 5.36 per cent. Upon this showing, together with the heavy budget for improvements which the railroads face, the companies declare that an increase in rates is imperative to prevent disastrous depletion of values in railroad investments.

To Promote Jewish Philanthropies

HOPING that he may bring about universal adoption of the pasteurization of all milk fed to infants, Mr. Nathan Straus has retired from active connection with R. H. Macy & Co. to devote the remainder of his life to the advancement of his philanthropic ideals. Mr. Straus is responsible for extensive welfare work conducted in the Holy Land, including a Relief Bureau which operates soup kitchens, an International Health Bureau, which has wrought remarkable results in the reduction of many diseases, and the Pasteur Anti-Hydrophobia Institute. This distinguished merchant is interested in various enterprises affecting the homogeneity of the Jewish race, notably the Jewish Agricultural Experimental Station in Palestine, and it is significant that he will have headquarters in Palestine; but all races and creeds are included in his public benefactions.

Southern Woman Honored

AT THE annual meeting of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, held in New Orleans in November, Miss Daisy McLaurin Stevens was elected president general. This is said to be the highest honor which can be bestowed upon a Southern woman. Mrs. Alexander White was the retiring president general. The society was organized in 1894, has nearly fourteen hundred chapters in the United States, North and South, and eighty thousand members. It is composed of wives, widows, and female descendants and relatives of men who served honorably in the military, naval or civil service of the Confederate States. The objects of the organization include the perpetuation of the memory of noble achievements of their ancestors and to preserve Southern historical records and cultivate the ties of friendship.

Rubber Atrocities Stir England

NEW disclosures of inhuman treatment of the rubber gatherers in South America are made the occasion of an appeal for governmental inquiry by the Aborigines' Protection Society, London. A correspondent of the Daily News (London) reported that only the native Indians work in the dense, fever-infected Bolivian jungles under force. Brazilians shrink from venturing into the region. Escape for the Indians, except by death, is impossible. Many have been carried there from distant parts of South America. Cruel whippings and other brutal punishments are said to be common, women being no exception from the iron rule of the padrones. Human beings are bought and sold at the pleasure of their overlords. The society mentioned will use the disclosures to focus the attention of English-speaking countries upon these barbarous conditions.

CAN WE TALK WITH MARS?

BY SAMUEL PHELPS LELAND, Ph.D., LL.D.

THE recent discussions about the possibility and probability of establishing some means of communicating with the inhabitants of the planet Mars have turned attention anew to that wonderful little world. In many respects this planet is a diminutive duplicate of our earth. It has an atmosphere surrounding it composed of oxygen, nitrogen, carbonic gas, and some minor elements entering into our own. Its atmosphere is less than one-half the density of ours, but is sufficient to carry large volumes of clouds and vapors. The planet runs in an orbit about 141 millions of miles from the sun and passes behind our earth every twenty-six months at a distance of about 45 millions of miles. Unlike our earth, only about one-fourth of its surface is water. The planet is attended in its orbital journeys by two satellites. It is the first planet outside of our earth in the solar family, and when nearest to us it shines with a brightness next to Venus and Jupiter, being a star of the first magnitude. Its light is reddish and resembles a great fire.

Particular attention was called to this planet in 1877 by an Italian astronomer named Schiaparelli, who made a micrometric map of its surface. He found dark bands seaming the light areas, which he named canali or channels. It had been taught that the dark regions were seas; but he determined that the polar caps were ice and snow, and the blue-green areas were seas and the reddish regions were land; and that the canals were natural watercourses, dividing the land into large islands, and that the inundations of them were caused by the melting of the polar snows and ice. The researches of Pickering, Lowell and others have confirmed and modified these conclusions somewhat.

PROFESSOR LELAND, ASTRONOMER AND NOTED LECTURER

Is Mars inhabited? There is nothing improbable in the affirmative assertion. Our planet is blessed with life; and the same forces that, under divine guidance, gave life here could certainly produce life there, or anywhere when conditions are the same, or similar. It can hardly be conceived that God's laws and activities end with this little world of ours. Our earth is only one planet in our solar system; and our solar system is only one amid the countless millions of systems about it. The forms of life on other worlds may differ from ours and from each other. They probably do differ. So far as we can determine, the same laws govern other worlds that govern our own. We can calculate the revolutions of other worlds and suns, can compute the eclipses on Mars or Jupiter, and read the wonders of their skies as we read the wonders of our own. The geologist, in reading the wonderful history of our earth written on the rocky tablets, comes upon chapters so marvelously strange that they seem like a dream. And yet science confirms them. There are geologies of other worlds as well as our own.

Our science cannot measure the stage of world growth of Mars to-day. If it be true, as some of our astronomers believe, that the canals on Mars are artificial, then the conclusion that there are beings who understand geometry and surveying in some form is justifiable. The great reservoirs to preserve the waters from these canals appear to be adapted to that purpose. To have planned thus requires intelligence.

Can we communicate with them by signs or by giant pictures? In order to hold intelligent communication, one thing is essential, namely, a code of signals the meaning of which must be understood by transmitter and receiver. This implies some previous agreement or understanding. To make an earth signal, however intelligent it may be to the instructed, could have no meaning to the beholder on Mars. The only thing it could possibly teach would be that some intelligent being constructed it. If the beings on Mars should erect a blazing cross or a flaming pillar of sufficient magnitude to be seen by the aid of our giant glasses, could we read from it any meaning? If seen at all, it would have no more meaning to us than the glow of an active volcano there.

It is unsafe, in this age of world wonders, to assume that any undiscovered thing cannot be done. Men are subduing the forces of this world so rapidly that some system of mental telegraphy or some kindred science may put them in communication with the unknown. But would the Martians understand us if we could speak to them?

It is claimed that curious lights have been seen on Mars and have been believed to be signal lights sent by the inhabitants of that distant world. This phenomenon can be easily explained as follows: The prevailing color of Mars is opal. When seen by daylight, there is a mingling of this color with a pearl white, a rose saffron, and a robin's-egg blue. When the sun's rays stream along its surface at certain angles, flashes of curious light are produced that resemble somewhat the color rays of a flashlight. These have, doubtless, been mistaken by the curious for flashlight signals. They are nothing new.

"JESUS IS HERE!"

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

Heralded by a marvelous light in the sky, which was seen by many, Jesus has come to Raymond, the scene of the story In His Steps. Popular excitement runs high, and extends throughout the country, skepticism being uppermost. Jasper Carter, editor of the Raymond Gazette, fails in an astonishing way to get either a sensational story or a photograph, as do also the other newspaper men, who come from other cities. Carter's star reporter, Barnes, accepts the reality of Jesus, and has a serious break with his employer. Jesus calls to see the editor, and leaves with him a remarkable manuscript. Jesus comforts Mrs. Page, whose little daughter dies, but does not bring the child back to life. He addresses an audience in First Church, an audience at the State university and again a great audience at the church. Virginia Page and Mr. Stanton, assistant to Mr. Maxwell, the pastor of First Church, have been strongly attracted to each other. In a riot of the crowd near the church Stanton protects Virginia from harm. Jesus appears on the church steps and quiets the mob. Some days later he leaves Raymond for the East. Virginia and Stanton announce their engagement. In the Gazette office Barnes and Carter begin to discuss the personality of Jesus.

CHAPTER VII—Continued

"WELL, I admit that was something unusual," said Mr. Carter, "but name anything else he did."

Barnes did not offer to say anything.

"Name anything else."

"I thought you just said you didn't want to argue about it."

"I don't. But name anything else this person you are so sure was Jesus did to prove the claim."

"Well"—and Barnes's eyes began to flash with his old-time eagerness, tempered now by his new-born passion for his Master—"neither you nor the whole army of press representatives could secure a single photograph of him. I call that something."

"A trick. It will be exposed some time. But when he had a chance to do a real miracle he failed. He couldn't raise Mrs. Page's child to life when he was asked."

"He would not."

"He did not. And did he heal any sick people while he was here?"

"I don't know. And if he had raised the child to life and healed every sick person in town would you have believed in him any more than you do now?"

"That is not the question." Carter grew angry again. "If he is Jesus he would have to do miracles."

"Mr. Carter, would you call that manuscript you asked me to read a literary miracle?"

Carter did not speak for a few moments. Then he exclaimed sullenly,

"No, just clever."

"Did you ever hear such a public speaker with such perfect command over an audience at the times you heard him?"

Carter hesitated. Lying was not one of his faults.

"No. I acknowledge I never heard his equal. But that would not make him divine."

"But how about his stilling the riot in front of First Church? Do you think a mere man could have done a thing like that?"

"The crowd was exhausted. He waited for the psychological instant before he spoke. I don't see anything astonishing about it. What other proofs have you to offer of his being the Jesus of history?"

"I'm afraid I haven't any that would convince you, Mr. Carter, but I am fully satisfied about him."

"Well, I'm not. He gave out that he was going to New York. A week has passed. He is not in New York, or, if he is, no one has heard anything of him. And, in my opinion, it is the last we will hear, unless he turns up as a fakir elsewhere. Why should he go to New York or Washington? Do you know what would happen to the real Jesus if he were to appear in those cities?"

"I think the multitudes would greet him, and he would receive the greatest welcome ever given to a person."

"I don't. If he appeared in New York the crowd would run after him as they run after every new fad there, and then go back to their money-making. And if he appeared in Washington, the politicians and society leaders would express a mild surprise and perhaps go to hear him if he condescended to speak in a fashionable hall, and then go back to their receptions and amusements, and forget all about him."

"If Jesus appears in New York or Washington, people will not forget him. Will the people of Raymond ever forget him? Why, Mr. Carter, do you realize that new history has been made here by his visit? This is a changed town, due to his presence. I do not believe you understand what has happened."

Before Carter could reply the Associated Press editor called him up.

"You said you wanted the first item from New York about—about—the person calling himself Jesus."

"Well?"

"Here is an item."

"Go ahead with it."

"There is a rumor that the person purporting to be Jesus, who has recently startled the town of Raymond with sensational appearances, is in New York and may at any time appear before the public. So far, no definite location of him has been made. It has been rumored that he is staying with a poor family in an obscure street. All attempts to find him on the part of press representatives have failed."

CHINA ORPHANAGES IN WAR TIME

LETTERS received from our missionaries in China show conditions to be slowly settling down after the suppression of the latest revolution. Rev. J. W. and Anna Ellmers Booyer, missionaries at Chinkiang, write under date of September 8, 1913:

"You have no doubt been interested in hearing of the 'new revolution,' which has just been put down. It was started by a few political schemers and dissatisfied office-seekers and spread to nearly every part of the republic. Nanking, distant from here sixty miles, was the last place to fall into the hands of the government. Thousands lost their lives in the siege. The rebels refused to give up till the last, as they knew there would be no mercy shown them.

"A gentleman from Nanking told me that the city is looted bare, the shops and even the private dwellings being left clean of everything. It is said that five thousand citizens took refuge in the foreign mission compounds. It seems strange that, a few years ago, the Chinese tried to kill all the foreigners, and now they are seeking protection at foreign hands. About one month ago Chinkiang passed through her time of trouble. One Sunday morning we were awakened by the sound of musketry at the fort, a few hundred yards from our home. The government soldiers came to take the city, and the rebels resisted. After taking the fort they soon lost it, then retook it, and very soon after were compelled to abandon it, as the shells from another fort made it uninhabitable. Till late in the afternoon the government soldiers passed and repassed our home, pulling their heavy guns. They made a hole in our wire netting fence for the muzzles of their guns. They hid behind our walls and those of our neighbors for protection. Shells from the large guns at the fort whistled over our heads and we saw them strike the ground beyond. One struck near us, and on going to the farm the same evening to see how the boys fared, I saw the bodies of two soldiers who had been killed. We thought in the morning that the farm would be the safest place, and sent all the boys over but three who bravely offered to stay with us; but it turned out that it was much worse, as shells fell quite near, and there was fighting around the place; besides, it was not protected by walls like our place. From here the government soldiers thought they were being pursued by the rebels and ran up toward Fairview. From there they retreated ten miles into the country to wait for reinforcements, which soon came.

"General Chang Hsuin sent word for all foreigners to leave in twenty-four hours, as he was going to hem the city in on all sides. He is the general who took Nanking. The girls' schools, with the foreign ladies, went aboard houseboats kindly loaned to us, which in case of danger would be towed out to the United States warship. We decided that we could not leave the children, and knew that God would protect us in the discharge of our duty. During this time efforts for peace were made by the government officials, who at the last moment succeeded by paying off and disarming the soldiers.

"After war, what? Widows and orphans to care for. What an opportunity to show the fruits of the Christian religion! Actions speak louder than words. Will you help?"

Missionary Booyer, who is superintendent of the Chinkiang Industrial Orphanage, sent us the good news that a number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD boys have offered themselves for the work of evangelists among their own people. The names of these boys are Wu Ping Iong, Kee Ho Chang, Ho Tsi Chen, Chao Chang Sheo, Hu Yu San, and Chien Chen Hai. These young workers, on dedicating themselves, gave strong and clear testimony to their faith in Christ as Saviour and their purpose of devoting their lives to giving the message of salvation to their fellow countrymen. Ku Ho Chang in his testimony said: "I take pleasure in doing the work of God and being a witness for him. Jesus came into the world to save every man and woman and child, but all did not believe on him and some crucified him. Formerly, we were ignorant and stubborn in heart, but Jesus our Lord quickened us by his Holy Spirit and made us his true disciples. We can now exhort others and give out what we have received. Jesus said: 'Ye are the light of the world.' Let us not put our light under a bushel but on a candlestick, so that it may give light to all in the house and in the world." All the testimonies showed that a change of heart had been followed by a deep and earnest desire for service. These youths are worthy representatives of the wonderful spiritual work which Christian America has been aiding in China.

THESE CHINESE ORPHANAGE BOYS HAVE DEDICATED THEMSELVES TO THE WORK OF EVANGELISM

Missionary Emil Johnson, of the Saratsi Mission in Shansi, also sends good news. He writes: "We have the joy of reporting that four of your CHRISTIAN HERALD orphanage girls were baptized in August, and received into the church. As these girls may be considered a part of the firstfruit of souls of the orphanage work, it is of course a great joy and encouragement to us to see these young lives decide wholly for Christ. One of the girls said in a testimony: 'They threw us out to the dogs, but the Lord saved us.' Your readers will be interested to learn how these girls were rescued. Peh Hoh Hua was thrown over the city walls of Paoteo, and taken up severely bruised. Tsi Lan Hua was born in a poor home, where they turned her out. Hsing Hua, on being found, was carried a long distance by a Christian to the orphanage and rescued. Hsien Hua was thrown out on the ground and tortured, but was rescued by the missionaries. May the Lord keep them all true to himself. The other children supported by CHRISTIAN HERALD readers are busy in school and are bright and happy. We send sincere Christian greetings and thanks to the dear patrons for all kind assistance extended to us in our rescue work."

THE LAND OF REST

BY P. G. MEATH

IN Heb. 4: 9 it is written: "There remaineth a rest for the people of God"; and we are told in I Pet. 1: 4 of an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, that fadeth not away. The youthful, gay and thoughtless are not impressed by those words like the aged, weary and careworn, who are tired of life and often anxious for their departure. Rest is sweet to all of us after a hard and faithful day's toil, and so is that long and unbroken rest to the people of God, after the trials and hardships of this life.

In our good Home, just what is the nature of our peace and rest we do not know; but judging from our Father's Word and works, we can form an opinion and perhaps not be very far from the truth.

Our Father's works are natural in wisdom, beauty and sublimity. Art, the work of man, cannot be compared. We are told in Isa. 64: 4: "For since the beginning of the world, men have not heard nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye seen, O God, beside thee, what he hath prepared for him that waiteth for him." And so, if ready when called, what an unspeakable blessing is prepared for us!

And this wonderful change of residence can take place when least expected. Should we lie down to sleep, old, decrepit, weak and weary, and wake up to find ourselves in youth, health and vigor once more, domiciled in a new world, in the midst of the everlasting habitations, immeasurable in extent, reaching farther than the eye or imagination could reach, charmingly fair and homelike to look upon, lying under sunny skies, which the fairest Italian skies could not be compared with; around us on every side vast scenes of smiling meadows, rolling hills and towering mountains, watered in every direction by flowing streams of living water, ever free from refuse, along the edge of the streams flowers, grass, reeds and rushes bathing and drinking in the limpid waters; around us on every side falling waters, babbling brooks, inland lakes and shining seas, groves and wild woods, far surpassing in beauty and sublimity the trees of Lebanon; earth, vines and bushes arrayed in flowers of every hue and dye; great trees covered with festoons of climbing flowers, freighting the air with odors charmingly sweet; birds of every plumage filling the air with song, untold harmony, different from anything we had ever heard; lawn beneath our feet, pleasant to the touch; harmony in the air and untold peace and harmony in the heart; before us forever the way of peace, love and pleasantness, we ourselves being in harmony and accord with all around us, being the children of grace, beauty, love and affection, by our heavenly Father fed, clothed and cared for, as he does for the birds of the air and the lilies of the field; no parting, no pain, no death, no frightful storms and burning drought; for us all a springtime of love, peace and rest, never to leave us; go where we will, no enemies, no strangers; and the one thought for us—pleasing above all else—that we are under the provident care of an affectionate heavenly Father, who will never leave us nor abandon us.

Now, admitting that God in his love and mercy has just such a home prepared for us (and we do not know how much more pleasing and attractive than is here set forth), are time and opportunity to be lost on the fleeting pleasures and vanities of this world, that are ours to prepare for a world so much more desirable?

We are going home. Shall we be diligent and watchful, or be careless and heedless until our sun is set and the dark shadows of that endless night gather round us?

"JESUS IS HERE!"

"Is that all?"

"That's all."

Carter turned from the instrument and gave the message to Barnes.

"You see. Nothing but rumor. It was a fake. A very good one, but a fake, Barnes."

Barnes sat looking at Mr. Carter curiously.

"Why are you so deeply interested in all this if it is only a fake, Mr. Carter? I have never seen you so profoundly stirred over anything."

Jasper Carter grew very red in the face.

"I hate a sham! Christianity is a sham, built up on a tissue of lies about superstition and miracles and all that rot. I hate any one that pretends to perpetuate all this sham like this Jesus of yours."

"You hate him because you are afraid of him."

"I hate him because he is a sham!" Carter shouted. "He would not dare appear in a city like New York or Washington before the thinking power of the nation. He knows—"

At that moment Carter was interrupted again by the Associated Press editor.

"An important news item from New York, Mr. Carter."

"All right. Go ahead."

"Jesus is here—"

"Hold on. What's that?"

"I'm reading off the telegraph, Mr. Carter. Just as—"

"All right. Go on."

"'Jesus is here. The most unprecedented event in the history of the world for the last two thousand years has occurred. At the conference of all the ministers and religious workers now being held in New York, suddenly there appeared the same person who created such a series of sensations in Raymond a week ago. There is no question whatever that it is Jesus. All the ministers present accept absolutely his claims and do not doubt his person.' There is a full list of well-known names here, Mr. Carter. Shall I give them?"

"No. Never mind about the rest."

Carter turned to Barnes.

"Could you catch that?"

"Yes. Jesus has really appeared in New York and he is accepted as such."

"By the ministers, but not by the people generally."

"But all New York will pay him honor."

"As long as he does not preach against the money god. Then they will crucify him. How long do you think Wall Street would listen to him, to say nothing of obeying his teaching?"

Barnes did not reply to this. After a while Carter continued:

"Oh, well, I haven't changed my mind. It's not the first time the world has been fooled. I may have to go to New York in a few days. If I do, I'll—"

"What?"

"I don't know," Carter spoke sullenly. "But if I get a chance I'll expose the sham."

"Mr. Carter," Barnes spoke gently, "why do you hate him? Oh, I wish I knew how to tell you what a new definition of life I have had ever since I began to love him."

For reply Carter turned his back on Barnes, and Barnes went out of the office. On his way down to the reporters' room he stopped in to see the telegraph editor.

Normally, the newspaper press man in the Gazette office was impervious to anything. News of all kinds from all over the world came to him the first man of the fifty thousand in Raymond. Wars, murders, scandals, elections to office, assassinations of kings and presidents, upheavals in politics, floods, earthquakes, fires, world disasters of every sort—all this flowed into the little room to the telegraph editor and he clicked it off on his typewriter, piling it up for the news editor to choose from, imperturbable, unmoved, working like a machine himself. Everything was grist to his mill. Whether it was a world catastrophe engulfing thousands or the nomination of presidential candidates in a republic, Hurd sat there, coolly taking it off on his machine, little less of a mechanism than his own typewriter.

But when Barnes went in he found Hurd visibly excited.

"I say, Barnes, this is the biggest thing ever came off the wire. And there's just pages of it. New York has gone wild. In all my experience I never have taken anything like this. The New York papers are just swamped with it."

"Hurd," said Barnes, his eyes glistening with excitement and pride in his Master, "you were present in the mob last Wednesday. What was your impression of the way the crowd quieted down?"

Hurd turned squarely about and faced Barnes.

"My impression? Barnes, let me tell you. I'm not an impressionable fellow, as you know. Who could be with all this human volcano spouting through him every day? But I want to say that when He—yes—I have to believe it is really Jesus—when he spoke those three words the other day, I seemed to feel a powerful hand put right on me and I just calmed down like a little child. I reckon I was one of the noisiest and most roughshod there. Fellows like me are, when we get going once. I tell you that was no mere man's work. No man living could have quelled that mob as he did."

Then, going back to his New York news, he continued:

"Some astounding things are going to occur in New York. It does not take a prophet to say it. See here! 'Jesus has the unquestioning endorsement of all the ministers and church leaders. He has already spoken out in his first public utterance against the cowardice and selfishness of those who own and control the press of New York because they refuse to help civilization in its great battle against drink. The churches that are doing such great work without the aid of other forces are praised by him, and the ministers encouraged.'

"And look here! 'At the close of his first public day in New York, every minute filled with sensational events, he went home with one of the poor families on the East Side; but the papers cannot locate him!' Won't that make the old man mad? I can't get over the stupendous way in which Jesus refused to be exploited by the press. The quiet, calm, almost careless way in which he went his way while he was here, indifferent to the impertinence of those New York, Washington and Chicago fellows, was the most astounding thing I ever witnessed. But—excuse my gab. Haven't talked so much since I was born."

Hurd shut up at once, and continued his regular occupation of rigid silence, but his unusual excitement communicated itself to Barnes as he went out on his way to the reporters' room.

"Jesus is here! Here in this world!" he said to himself. "I have seen him! Shaken hands with him! He forgave my sins personally! It is the one great event of my life! And he is going on with his mighty work! He has appeared to strengthen the faith of his disciples, to rebuke the hypocrites and the selfish, to comfort the broken-hearted and make men, even like Hurd and myself, feel the touch of the divine in our common lives! Thank God! Thank God! My Lord and my Saviour!"

Barnes worked all that day with a tear in his eye and a heart-throb of delight, and ever as he worked, the vision of Jesus in New York, at the center of the republic's money fever, haunted him. He wondered every minute what Jesus would do there, how the people would receive him, what would be the outcome of it all.

And then, suddenly, to the astonishment and disappointment and chagrin and wonderment of all disciples all over the country, he who had so thrilled every heart and roused to wondrous exaltation all minds that longed for him, disappeared, leaving no trace; as if a drop of water had melted into the wide ocean. All New York was startled as much by his disappearance as by his coming. He had performed no miracles, had made no powerful impression except that one before the ministers. No one could be found who knew where he was or what his purpose could be. No one could say whether he would appear again if at all. But hearts were heavy and hopes were quenched—hopes which had been kindled high by his first appearance. How could he disappoint the people? Where could he have gone? What was his future plan? Surely he would not vex the world by so imperfect and unfinished a task. He had as yet done nothing except to show himself to a few of his disciples. It was only a glimpse of heaven's glory! And the world was so hungry for a greater knowledge of his power, and it needed him, oh, it needed him so much!"

At the end of a month there was still no sign of his presence anywhere.

Carter remarked to Barnes one evening as he was leaving the office, "How about this Jesus now? Do you still believe in him?"

"I do," said Barnes bravely, but his heart was heavy. He had been anticipating wonderful events and he could not conceal his feelings. "I shall always believe in him. I owe my new life to him."

Carter eyed him closely.

"Your new life? Well— But—my point was well taken, eh? It was a fake!"

"It was not. He will appear again."

"I doubt it. But never mind that. Barnes, I'm going to New York in two or three weeks to attend the National Editorial Convention, as you know. May be gone a week. Marks will be in charge here. If I see anything of your Jesus, I will wire."

He parted with Barnes, sneering in his rough fashion, and Barnes, whose Christian discipleship did not mean perfection yet, replied:

"Mr. Carter, I may find it impossible to stay on the Gazette. I may have to leave while you are gone."

"You can leave any time," Carter retorted. "You may remember I told you you could stay until I proved to you that the whole thing was a sham. Now that it is proved, I don't see why you have to quit."

To this Barnes made no answer, but he went home depressed and sorrowful, his heart heavy, grieving for the unaccountable silence of his Lord and Master. Where could he be? Why was he not overturning wickedness, comforting his disciples, inspiring the world with his presence as he had so wonderfully begun to do? Where was he? Surely, his mission was not fulfilled in the appearances he had so far made.

Mr. Maxwell and Stanton were going over the same matter one day after a church meeting where many of the old pledge-takers had been present. The meeting had closed with many beseeching prayers that Jesus might return.

"He will, in his own good time, I am sure," Maxwell had said. Stanton was also firm in his belief, as were also Powers and others. But the church workers could not account for His absence and silence.

Stanton lingered in the church study to consult with Mr. Maxwell about his approaching marriage to Virginia.

"Of course we wish to avoid all just criticism of apparent haste. But Virginia is thirty-four. I am forty. We have apparently known each other always."

"JESUS IS HERE!"

"My dear fellow, I am ready to perform the ceremony for you any time," Mr. Maxwell had said smiling. "You need not fear any hostile criticism from Raymond people. They all love you and are really interested in your romance. I think it will disappoint many of them if you and Virginia don't get married soon."

Stanton laughed happily. He went over to see Virginia that evening, and two weeks from that same day was married with a few of Virginia's old-time church and settlement friends present.

"You don't have to tell us where you are going with the two weeks' vacation the church granted you," said Mr. Maxwell after the ceremony, as he and the bride and groom were for a moment together.

Stanton looked at Virginia. "We are willing to tell you, aren't we, Mrs. Stanton?"

"Yes," Virginia said, out of her eyes shining the love-light of perfect trust in her husband. "Mr. Maxwell ought to know."

"We are going to New York. We believe we shall see Jesus there. He consecrated and blessed our love for each other. Our hearts hunger for him. We long to see him again."

"God grant you may," Maxwell answered. "The Lord bless you both, and give you a vision of him. I do not, cannot, believe his mission is over."

Two days later Stanton and Virginia were in the great city.

For a week they had sought in various ways to trace some clue that would lead their steps to Him. But to no avail.

The eighth day they were walking down Broadway and had stepped into Trinity Church. They had lingered there enjoying the calm beauty of the interior, and on coming out Stanton had suggested a stroll down Wall Street.

They had hardly crossed Broadway, and Stanton, who was familiar with the city on account of his residence there when a social settlement worker, had directed Virginia's attention to the eight massive Doric columns of the United States Subtreasury Building prominent down the narrow street, when almost at once, as crowds gather in a big city, people seemed to spring up all about them, hurrying past them.

Confused murmurs of disconnected but tremendously exciting talk rose about them.

Stanton, with Virginia eagerly clinging to his arm, and listening, suddenly exclaimed:

"What was that? Some one said 'Jesus is here!'"

He spoke to a fine-looking man who had just run out of one of the brokers' offices near by.

"What is the excitement about?"

"Ah! I've only just caught the news. They say that Jesus has appeared again. Better follow the crowd. I have learned, sir, that crowds generally are pretty good signposts. They seem to know where the center of interest is."

All this spoken with great good humor, but with an underlying deep earnestness.

Stanton and Virginia walked on with the man, each step drawing nearer to the front of the Subtreasury Building. Several city clocks near by struck the noon hour. The Trinity chimes sounded it. The narrow street was already black with men. Office doors opened all along and poured out a stream of men. Men were running in from Broad Street. Already the space in front of the Treasury Building was thick with men.

"Look!" Stanton suddenly spoke, and pointing for Virginia, "Look! Up there! By Washington's statue! There He is! He is there! Oh, it is true! Jesus is here! Thank God!"

"How do you know?" the man had asked—the man who had answered Stanton's first question.

"I have seen him. My wife and I have both seen him. We are from Raymond."

"Ah! from Raymond, and you have seen him? What do you suppose will happen now?"

But Stanton did not answer. He and Virginia could get no farther than the foot of the steps that led up to that colossal figure of the first President. There the crowd completely hemmed them in. The dense mass overflowed upon the steps, all over the street as far as eye could reach—men—almost all men. Virginia could see only here and there a woman. She seemed almost alone, surrounded by men representing New York's material wealth, its selfishness, its material, gambling, crazy wealth—but interwoven in it also that indefinite energizing of forces that was not all self-seeking—but men, money-loving men at the heart of the greatest of cities, in front of a building representing in its structure patriotism and money. And up there at the base of the pedestal He stood. He was holding in his arms a little girl not three years old; the look on his face spelled command; the smile on his lips suggested infinite power and the strength that exercises it in love.

The little girl was looking up at him, one hand resting with perfect confidence on Jesus' shoulder. In the other hand between her little fingers she held a wreath of artificial flowers.

MORNING WATCH CONFERENCE

THE World's Morning Watch Movement held an all-day conference on November 17 in the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York, and claimed the attention of several hundred believers who would learn to claim their larger prayer privileges. The Morning Watch Movement, which was organized about ten years ago, has been recently incorporated, and is under a board of directors of twenty-one conservative Christian men, the president being Mr. William Phillips Hall; also president of the American Tract Society. It has a threefold mission: to popularize daily devotional study of the Bible, to build up and maintain family worship, and to encourage a right understanding and wise use of prayer.

It was to emphasize this last phase of its work that the program of the conference was prepared. The keynote of the day was sounded by Mr. Robert E. Speer of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, who spoke on "Christ the Great Example in Prayer."

Periods of intercession were conducted at different hours by the Rev. Henry W. Frost, home director of the China Inland Mission. He spoke on "Intercession" as a great sharing with God in the accomplishment of his work. "Cramped prayers," he said, "are out of place in a world of need where God's love has wide range. There must be a specification." Mr. Frost told of one of the leaders in the China Inland Mission who could not only pray by name for each of the 1,050 missionaries of his board, but remembered special needs of their families. The prayer meeting was considered by the Rev. Charles L. Mead of Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, New York, not only as the birthplace of the church, but as the most potent recruiting place in the program.

The conference closed with an address of great power by Rev. James A. Francis, D.D., of Boston.

The Morning Watch Movement headquarters are at 30 East Forty-second Street, New York.

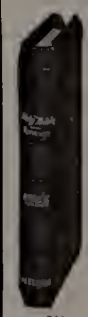
WHY The American Standard Bible

(Edited by the American Revision Committee)

IS BEST FOR HOME AND STUDY



All scholars are agreed that this is the most accurate translation of the Scriptures, as it embodies the results of Biblical research in the last 300 years, during which time a greater number of authentic manuscripts have been brought to light than in the thousand of years preceding.

Those who cling to the old version voluntarily deprive themselves of all that Christian Scholarship has gained in exact knowledge of the Bible during the last 300 years.

Then, too, the exact thought of the sacred writers is given in readily understandable language in this version—hence its readings are much more interesting and instructive to the entire family.

The American Standard Bible is made in several editions especially suitable for home and study use., combining large type and compact size. Over 200 styles to meet every requirement. Prices, 35 cents to $50.00.

Just let us send you sample pages and price list, that you, yourself, may see what a wonderful Book it really is.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Spreading Christmas Cheer*

HOW may the Christmas spirit prevail? How can it be made to spread till it becomes the dominant spirit in the world? We all know what a happy day Christmas is. Its fragrances and sights and sounds are so delightful that they are looked forward to a year ahead and remembered fondly many years after. How can we fill every day with that same sort of cheer, so that Christmas may really last the year round, as we used to wish it might when we were children?

Let us study the matter as if it were a problem in algebra or arithmetic. What makes Christmas cheer? If we can find that out we may be able to find out how to make enough of it to go all around the world and last all through the year.

On Christmas day everybody thinks of somebody else. There has been much planning and working that friends and acquaintances shall have a merry Christmas, and when the day dawns at last that is exactly the kind of a Christmas they have. Their Christmas is merry because we made it so. What made us do that? Because we loved them. We have found already something very definite.

If everybody would love everybody else, everybody would be happy every day. That sounds like a large order, does it not? But when we talk about Christmas we are dealing with large forces and large personalities.

But before we go on we must notice what we have heard and said so often, that the deepest Christmas happiness does not come from the things we get but the things we give. We make our friends happy by our love-sent gifts. But we make ourselves happy by giving. And they make themselves happy by giving to others and to us. So it appears that it is really the love itself which one has in one's heart rather than the gifts that come from another's love that is the biggest source of happiness.

And where does this love come from —the love that longs to give? We know where it comes from. We know better at Christmas than at any other time. The angels told the shepherds about it. It was in all that story of Bethlehem, and the later story of Nazareth, and Capernaum, and Bethsaida, Bethany, Jerusalem—and Calvary. The love is in God's heart, and he sent it down to earth in the person of Jesus the Christ.

We are back again on very familiar ground. To spread the spirit of Christmas we must spread the knowledge of the Founder of the Christmas feast—the King whose birthday Christmas is. We must begin by receiving his Christmas gifts to us, gifts of pardon, of love, of salvation, of joy. It is sad that in the work and play of the Christmas festival we are so apt to lose sight of the real purpose of Christmas. Christ was God's great gift to the world to save it from sin. And we miss the essence of Christmas joy and the real power to spread it if we do not receive his gift of salvation into our own hearts.

We have heard again and again that the sum of all sin is selfishness. If Christ saves us from sin he saves us from selfishness. This is his plan. And this is the way, at last, by which Christmas cheer is to be spread through the year and around the world. Everybody that knows of Christ spends at least one day in the year in the atmosphere of love. But if we really love him, if we have been really saved by him, we shall make that the atmosphere of every day.

One or two very practical things might well be said just here. It seems a travesty on the feast of the gentle and bountiful Christ that so much of the Christmas giving made in his name is of useless things to people who already have abundant stores, when so many are hungry and needy and sad. Christ's folks should learn better every year where to put their gifts so they will count for the most. And every year we should try to do something to make conditions more just and fair so that as each succeeding Christmas dawns there shall be fewer homes in want.

* "THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT AND HOW IT MAY PREVAIL." Isa. 9: 2-7. Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic for Sunday, December 21, 1913.

A Home Christmas*

"TURN about is fair play." How many Christmas days have father and mother made glad for you? Have you really begun to feel the delight of making Christmas glad for them?

No need to stop to argue that we ought to do it. Not much need to stop to regret that we have not tried harder before. But this year, let's really do it.

It is not only the gifts, though we should be thoughtful and really self-sacrificing about that. What they want most of all is a repetition of your old assurances that you love them, that you still feel your need of them, that you still want them near.

Then, too, wouldn't it be a good plan to make Christmas a time of straightening up any wrong things that may have been clinging to our lives, any bad habits in which we have become entangled? We usually think of New Year's Day as the time for beginning again in this way, but if we are planning a big gift for father and mother, give them this biggest gift of all, the assurance that we are, with God's grace, going to be the kind of sons and daughters he and they want us to be.

If we have never yet made the great surrender of our lives to Christ, do that this Christmas time. You will be cheering the Saviour's heart as well as bringing unspeakable Christmas joy to those "who have made many Christmases glad for you."

One more suggestion. Christmas is a good day to set new home standards of thoughtfulness and gentleness, kindness, patience and helpfulness that will last throughout the year.

* "HOW CAN I MAKE A GLAD CHRISTMAS FOR THOSE WHO HAVE MADE MANY CHRISTMASES GLAD FOR ME?" Matt. 15: 4; Eph. 6: 2; Gen. 46: 29; Prov. 10: 1; 16: 24. Epworth League Topic for Sunday, December 21, 1913.

THE MONEY-MAKERS' CLUB

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

A GREAT many of the letters that come in just say: "Please send me a booklet," or "Will you please tell me about the Money-Makers' Club?"

But some of the letters begin like this: "I want to make money, because—"

Shall I tell you some of the reasons? This letter is from a sweet little girl who lives in Ohio. She says:

"I am a public school teacher and the wants of many children cannot be fully described in words. You can, perhaps, understand how children suffer for many things that are necessary. If I could have some money I am sure that I could help the little ones. Do you see that I am asking to join the club? Please send me one of the pamphlets."

This is from one of my older girls—a Southerner:

"I am a mother with six living children. Two of the girls are ready for college, so naturally the demand for money is great. Will you send me particulars of the Money-Makers' Club?"

A nice little note came to me from a Michigan girl. Here it is: "I had better speak of myself, too, as I suppose you will want to know what I am like. I graduated from our high school last June (my two sisters graduated a year before I did). Now this is my trouble: We cannot all go to college at the same time on account of the expense, so I am staying home. I work in a dentist's office and put all the money away for my education. I wonder if your club would help me?"

There is a rather pathetic little case that I want to tell you about. The girl in question is an invalid, troubled with a very painful back. She writes to me with a simplicity that tugs at the heart-strings: "I want to join your Money-Makers' Club. If I can make some money it means that I can have treatment for my back—and perhaps get well!"

Then there is another kind of letter that comes in. The "very well satisfied" kind of a letter. Shall I show some of them to you?

Here is a letter from the West. It is very short and to the point:

"I have received the Money-Makers' booklet, and I am delighted. I have done bushels of work already, and I expect to earn a pin soon. I am so glad that you let me belong."

Here is a letter from a rather clairvoyant young lady:

"Do send me the booklet—quick, because I think I know what the club is about. If my guess is right I can make lots of money—because I have promises—"

I am going to stop quoting the letters. You might guess, and, besides, I want my "Pandora's Box" to be a real surprise. Surprises are such fun! Still another girl sent in this letter—a letter that speaks well for the success of the club:

"I have received the pamphlet and I love your ideas. I am sure that the M. M. C. will be a great success. I only wish that every girl could belong. Will you please send booklets to my sister in the South and to my four chums? I will enclose the right addresses. You see, I want others to have a share in my new-found treasure."

Friends of mine, it would be simply impossible to show you all my letters; so I have only printed a few of the characteristic ones to give you an idea of our plans. And now, in the tiny space left, I want to talk to you.

Some of you must have some reason for wanting to earn money. Think of all the things that money will buy—Christmas presents, the dress you want so badly, music lessons, books, a trip to the seashore, a new sofa for the parlor. And, besides the money earned, you will have presents—a pin (a pretty, expensive-looking one with a jeweled setting) is among the first—and after that all sorts of things will come thick and fast in a regular snowstorm. I wish that my girls would send in for particulars and enter into the spirit of the thing.

I have only one more plan that I want to tell you of—a very important plan, too.

It is just two weeks from Christmas, two weeks that will be full of happiness and joy and the hum of excitement. Everybody will be rushing through the shops, and sewing far into the night, and fashioning dainty things for gifts. It is the spirit of the time—this spirit of giving.

The Money-Makers' Club has caught the feeling (some feelings are as catching as the measles, although they are much more pleasant) and it wants to help you out with the spirit of giving. So it has decided to give each club member a present—the present of a set of pictures printed on heavy paper suitable for framing. Every girl must take advantage of this Christmas offer. You see, after Christmas, the remaining pictures must be stored up at the North Pole with Santa Claus, and I hate to have them wasted.

We ask one small token of your good will in return for our present. Write immediately. We will tell you everything.

Appropriate Christmas Present

Our Red Letter Bibles and Testaments make the most seasonable gifts around Christmas time. Appropriate for Father, Mother, Sister, Brother, Sunday School Teacher, Pastor—there is no one who would not appreciate a gift of this kind.

In the New Testament every word uttered by our Lord is printed in red; in the Old Testament every passage or incident to which our Lord made reference during his earthly ministry is in red, and every passage in the Old Testament considered a Messianic prophecy, pointing to Christ as the coming Saviour of the World, is indicated by a red star.

This is a Bible well worth having, no matter how many other Bibles you may already own.

One hundred leading clergymen assisted and determined which of the words contained in the Revelation are to be attributed to Christ.

THE HERO OF FAITHFULNESS*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

"AS JEHOVAH commanded Moses, so the children of Israel did, and they divided the land" (verse 5). Those who have the Red Letter Bible will find at the back a most excellent map showing just how the land was divided among the tribes. Dan has the farthest north, and Simeon the farthest south. In connection with the study of the map read the thirteenth chapter of Joshua.

"Now, therefore, give me this hill country whereof Jehovah spake in that day." It was Caleb the aged who was speaking. Eighty-five years old was he when he claimed his right to the most dangerous spot in all Canaan. Giants were there, and they had infested the land for more than forty years. Hebron was their stronghold. For thirty-eight years God had made of Canaan a closed door because the Israelites had feared these giants at Hebron, and would not listen to the entreaties of Joshua and Caleb to go up against the giants and possess the land. As a reward for Caleb's bravery and faith, God promised that Hebron should be his when the land should be divided. The giants were a part of his inheritance, too, but that did not alarm him. Hear his brave words: "I am this day four score and five years old, and yet I am as strong this day as I was in the day that Moses sent me; as my strength was then, even so is my strength now. . . . It may be that Jehovah will be with me, and I shall drive them out." And he did drive them out, God helping him.

"Why are we not all Calebs?" asked the leader in a Christian Endeavor meeting. Then he replied to his own question by saying: "Partly because we do not keep our eyes open for Hebrons to conquer. Some people have valley eyes that never look up to the mountains. Their ideal for life is to get along easily. An enemy may lurk behind every tree, but they keep in the middle of the road and avoid trouble. Everywhere there are Hebrons in the hands of our foes. There is the Hebron of infidelity. There is the Hebron of the saloon. There are the Hebrons of impurity, and misrule, and gambling, and dishonesty, and selfishness. We can shut our eyes to them and have a tent on the plain, or we can open our eyes to them and be Calebs. Let the question with each one of us be: 'What hard thing will I attempt for the Master?' Whatever our Hebrons may be, let us gain courage from Caleb."

Instead of telling boys and girls hobgoblin stories of imaginary giants, let them be told about Caleb—his whole life story: when he was young and feared not the giants, but was anxious to go ahead and fight them, and when he was old, just as courageous still. Fear is, in fact, very like a disease that saps nerves and weakens the brain, and takes away bodily strength. So those who tell children about giants and ghosts in a way to frighten them are doing the little people a great wrong. We remember that in our childhood we were made to suffer mental tortures because our fears were excited by nurses. On the other hand, how desirable it is to train children to be courageous at all times. They are thus best prepared to meet the hard things in life which are likely to come to them.

"Therefore Hebron became the inheritance of Caleb because that he wholly followed Jehovah the God of Israel" (verse 13). An aged Christian should be like an orange tree which has both ripened fruit and fresh blossoms at the same time. A Christian may retire from business, but never from fruitful activity in doing good. Caleb might have made excuses that are common among old men who have lost heart and hope, and claim a right to throw up the fighting and take an easy place. He chose mountain-climbing instead.

> Thy thoughts and feelings shall not die,
> Nor leave thee when gray hairs are nigh,
> A melancholy slave;
> But an old age serene and bright,
> And lovely as a Lapland night,
> Shall lead thee to thy grave.

Those who travel to the Holy Land are quite sure to visit Hebron. It is a place of about 10,000 inhabitants, and is surrounded by vineyards, olive groves, almond and fig trees. There is a massive mosque 200 by 150 feet on the ground, and about fifty feet high. Inside of the mosque is the cave of Machpelah, the burial place of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and their wives, excepting Rachel, the wife of Jacob. Hebron is said to be a hotbed of Moslem fanaticism, and only three times have Europeans been permitted to enter it. The Prince of Wales was admitted in 1862, the Marquis of Bute in 1866, and the crown prince of Prussia in 1869. These visitors were accompanied by Dean Stanley, Fergusson, Rosen and others. When we visited Palestine in 1904, although "a drive to Hebron" was on our ticket, the driver would not take us there. He probably thought it dangerous. When we discovered that he was not taking us there we were too far on our return to Jerusalem to insist upon going to Hebron. It is generally said that Damascus is the oldest city in the world, but Hebron is older. See Gen. 13: 18, 15: 2. The history of events occurring in Hebron related in the Bible are most interesting. It was once the royal residence of David. (II Sam. 2: 1-14.) It was the headquarters of Absalom when he rebelled and tried to set up a kingdom. (II Sam. 15: 10.) It was repeopled after the Israelites returned from the Captivity. (II Chron. 11: 10.)

"The Greatheart of Israel." Caleb has been so called, because he was great in strength, great in years, great in courage, great in faithfulness, great in determination. It would be well for us to emulate him in all these points. It is what God wants us to do, and that is why he has put this story into the Bible, a living epistle to be known of all men, teaching them how to be and do and live. By such a story we gain the true idea of greatness.

"Immortals," what are they? A company of men and women who are supposed to have done something worthy of perpetual remembrance in art, science, war, letters, philanthropy. Some of their names are inscribed in a Hall of Fame, and their portraits adorn the walls. Men delight to honor their fellows who have done great things. Henry Pestalozzi was born in Switzerland, and had his career there. His span of life was between 1746 and 1827. He was a Greatheart: witness the epitaph which his fellow countrymen have placed upon his monument: "Savior of the poor, father of the fatherless, founder of the new elementary school, educator of humanity, man, Christian citizen, everything for others, nothing for himself! Blessings on his name." Such a man is an immortal on earth and in heaven, for God has said in his Book: "They rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

God knows his "immortals" and he has their names written in his book of remembrance. Let us care less what men think and say about us, and more about what God and the

"CHEER UP, SONNY!"

AUNT MARY said in her cheering way,
"The world wasn't made in a day—a day;
And the blue sky, where the white clouds flit,
Why, the Lord was six days painting it:
So cease your worry,
And do not fret;
Just cheer up, sonny,
You'll get there yet."

Aunt Mary said in her cheering way,
"The Lord sends that which is best each day;
If you'd grow a man both good and true,
A lesson in patience is good for you:
So cease your worry,
And do not fret;
Just cheer up, sonny,
You'll get there yet."

Full oft to me in the days of youth
Aunt Mary repeated the same old truth;
And I dreamed brave deeds as I heard her say,
"The world wasn't made in a day—a day:
So cease your worry,
And do not fret;
Just cheer up, sonny,
You'll get there yet."

The dreams of youth are not realized,
I haven't gained yet some things I prized;
But I've learned in a measure the lesson of trust,
And not to endure just because I must:
That God is my Father,
And he loves me;
And some day his wisdom

BETTER POSITION

And Increased Salary as a Result of Eating Right Food

There is not only comfort in eating food that nourishes brain and body but sometimes it helps a lot in increasing one's salary.

A Kans. school teacher tells an interesting experience. She says:

"About two years ago I was extremely miserable from a nervousness that had been coming on for some time. Any sudden noise was actually painful to me and my nights were made miserable by horrible nightmare.

"I was losing flesh all the time and at last was obliged to give up the school I was teaching and go home.

"Mother put me to bed and sent for the doctor. I was so nervous the cotton sheets gave me a chill and they put me in woolens. The medicine I took did me no apparent good. Finally, a neighbor suggested that Grape-Nuts might be good for me to eat. I had never heard of this food, but the name sounded good, so I decided to try it.

"I began to eat Grape-Nuts and soon found my reserve energy growing so that in a short time I was filling a better position and drawing a larger salary than I had ever done before.

"As I see little children playing around me and enter into their games I wonder if I am the same teacher of whom, two years ago, the children spoke as 'ugly old thing.'

"Grape-Nuts food with cream has become a regular part of my diet, and I have not been sick a day in the past two years." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

THE NATIONAL ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE CONVENTION

THE Anti-Saloon League of America celebrated its twentieth anniversary at its national convention held at Columbus, Ohio, November 10 to 13. The paramount idea of the convention was the introduction of a constitutional prohibitory measure at the next session of Congress and to arrange for a national campaign in its behalf. There were about 4,000 registered delegates to the convention, which was held in Memorial Hall. At the opening session, Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, Bishop Luther B. Wilson and Hon. John G. Woolley made eloquent addresses. On Tuesday ex-United States Senator Sanders of Tennessee, Rev. Dr. E. C. Dinwiddie, legislative superintendent at Washington, Mr. Marion Lawrence, Mrs. Lillian Burt and Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry spoke. After the oratorical prohibition contest, Dr. P. A. Baker made his report in an able address. On Wednesday Judge C. A. Pollock, of North Dakota; Rev. Dr. Howard H. Russell (who founded the league twenty years ago); Rev. T. Alexander Cairns, of New Jersey; Hon. C. M. Hay, of Missouri; Mrs. F. D. Richards, Father Patrick J. Murphy, of Dalhart, Texas; and Father J. J. Curran, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., made addresses.

Dr. Russell gave interesting personal reminiscences. He was so poor, and there were so few persons rallied to him at the beginning, that one Saturday night he was compelled to pawn his watch for food for his family over Sunday. Now there are 35,000 pulpits opened to paid representatives of the league every year, and the churches of various denominations subscribe about a million dollars a year for its support.

Ex-Governor M. R. Patterson of Tennessee made an eloquent address. Among other things he said: "Going through life, I have seen drink drag down many of the associates of my boyhood, blasting their hopes and consigning them to untimely graves. I have seen its forked lightning strike my firstborn—the child of my young manhood—and I have borne with him the suffering and tried to help him in his brave but melancholy struggle for redemption. At last I have felt its foul and stealthy blow, as it turned upon me in its deadly and shaming wrath—upon me, who had pleaded before the people for its very existence. Men have called me strong; and while I could see its harm in others, I thought myself immune, as thousands before my time have thought. I needed help, for I was groping and my feet were stumbling in the dark. Deep in humiliation, tortured and condemned in my own esteem—which is the severest penalty a man may inflict upon himself—I thought of the oft-repeated phrases about personal liberty and of the power of the human will to resist temptation, with which I had beguiled myself, and I found them as unsubstantial as the fabric of a dream.

"When logic failed and reason gave no answer, I cast aside all pride of opinion—all thought of what the world might say or think—and went to the throne of Almighty God. There, on bended knees, I asked for light and strength and they came. The curtains of the night parted, and the way was clear. I arose a changed man. From a critic of others, I looked within. From an accuser, I became a servant in my own house to set it in order. From a vague believer in the guidance of divine power, I have become a convert to its infinite truth. From an unhappy and dissatisfied man, out of tune with the harmony of life and religion, I have become happy and content, firmly anchored in faith, and ready to testify from my own experience to the miraculous power of God to cleanse the souls of men."

Governors L. B. Hanna of North Dakota and George H. Hodges of Kansas spoke on the value of prohibition to their respective States. Ex-Governor Frank J. Hanly introduced resolutions calling for a national constitutional prohibition amendment, which the trustees had already adopted and which was ratified by the convention. The scene of enthusiasm which had been evoked by ex-Governor Patterson's address, was repeated when these resolutions were adopted. On Thursday Rev. Dr. Young of Kentucky, Mr. Clinton N. Howard of Rochester, Rev. Sherman Coolidge (an Arapahoe Indian), Mr. George D. Selby of Ohio, Hon. Don C. McMullen of Florida, Mrs. E. A. Boole of Brooklyn, Bishop W. F. Anderson of the Methodist Church, Hon. Fred. S. Caldwell of Oklahoma, Congressmen Clyde Kelly of Pennsylvania, W. H. Murray of Oklahoma, Richmond P. Hobson of Alabama, Rev. Ben. H. Spence of Canada, Rev. Sam. W. Small of Georgia, Hon. George H. Wilson of Illinois, Major J. B. Merwin of Washington and other able speakers addressed the convention.

The convention adopted a resolution, introduced by Mr. William H. Anderson of Baltimore, Md., asking the Daughters of the American Revolution to rescind the action of their last convention, requesting the restoration of intoxicating liquor to the canteen of the army. A reorganization of the league was effected by the adoption of a new constitution and by-laws, which grant increased power to the national administration of the league, having in view a more compact and efficient fighting force in behalf of a saloonless nation. The new constitution will go into effect June 1. The league re-elected the officers, who include Bishop Luther B. Wilson for president and Dr. P. A. Baker as general superintendent.

angels know about us. Then we shall achieve true greatness. "They that believe in God are men raised to the highest power," said Phillips Brooks. Caleb had not only the vision of God to make him brave, but the life of God in his soul. That made him cheerful when others were despondent, and brave when others were afraid. Let other young men repeat his long and strong life by drinking at the same fountain of youth. Young men of today must often pass among the Anakim of mighty temptations, even when in the path of duty. As men in the full glow of abundant life have little to fear from contagion, so men full of the divine life who meet temptation only in duty's path will pass it unscathed.

Sensible Christmas Presents

YOU put your problem this way: "It is hard to find a present that will fit my friend." We put our answer this way: "It will be hard to find a friend whom the present of a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will not fit." And when you start to look over the list of presents suggested in addition to the year's subscription, you will find still further answers to your problems.

Red Letter Bible
Every word uttered by our Lord is printed in red

Start with father and mother. You are disappointed that you can't get home for Christmas, but they are more disappointed about it than you are. What would bring them the greatest possible cheer—a cheer that will not fade when the holiday season is past? You remember how THE CHRISTIAN HERALD used to come to the old home every week. Suppose for one of the Christmas presents you make sure that it will keep on coming throughout the year.

Perhaps father and mother are themselves puzzled what to send. Are all the children who have gone out into the world getting THE CHRISTIAN HERALD now? It helped them while they were home. It will help them still, and perhaps they need the help more now than they did then. There is just time enough to send in a subscription and have THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and The Christian Herald Almanac arrive as a Christmas morning present.

Christian Herald Almanac
100 pages of facts and figures, is given Free with annual subscriptions

All the CHRISTIAN HERALD presents are sensible presents. And a sensible present should be not merely sentimental, nor merely useful. CHRISTIAN HERALD presents are both. They bring a note of affectionate regard and thoughtfulness which will last throughout the year.

Send your friend a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and every week for a whole year your forethought will bring cheer, comfort, inspiration, entertainment, instruction to all the inmates of his home.

Questions and Answers

C. H. L., Portland, Me. Is it right to fear God, or to love him? The Scriptures tell us to serve the Lord with fear. (See Ps. 2: 11.)

The word "fear," as used in the Bible, has two distinct meanings—fear in the sense of dread or fright, and fear in the sense of reverence. It is not easy to determine which meaning is intended, for the two Hebrew words most used have both meanings. In the New Testament the Greek word used has more generally the sense of fright or dread. The whole message of the Bible is that what God most earnestly desires from mankind is their love. But sin keeps them from loving him, so he reveals to them, through conscience, and through the law, the fearful results of sin. This awakens a fear which drives them to him for pardon and safety. A man who is living in sin, when his conscience is aroused, is afraid of the power and the justice of God. After he is pardoned he feels a reverence for God and the beginnings of love for him. As he progresses in the Christian life all fear of God, in the sense of being afraid, is removed. John speaks of the "perfect love which casteth out fear." (I John 4: 18.) Throughout the Christian life reverence abides, but love grows more and more dominant. The wonderful word is "friendship." God wants us to be friends of his, as Abraham and Moses were, to serve him because we love him, to be glad in the gifts his love bestows. Christ would like to lead us all to the place where he can say to us as he said to his disciples: "Henceforth I call you not servants, hut I have called you friends." (John 15: 15.)

B. M., Dubuque, Iowa. There is a saving grace in calm reflection. There is probably no man in public life, or in private life either for that matter, who has not bitterly regretted that at some critical point in his career he did not stop to think well and deeply before taking a certain step, which he now sees he should have avoided. It was a step which led to consequences he could well have foreseen, and which he never would have taken at all, had he given it due consideration, and studied its moral aspect. It seemed just a momentary slacking of the reins, a trifling concession to the desire for something he could not touch with strict honor, a yielding to an ignoble impulse—and the thing was done which he would afterward have given worlds to recall.

Mrs. G. E. A., Middle Dam, Me. Many have had the same experience you are now undergoing—a time of spiritual depression, allied to physical affliction. It is the time, above all others, when we should fall back on God's promise to hear and answer the prayer of the earnest soul. It is a time to pour out before him the confession of our faults, our backsliding and our indifference and to ask him, for the sake of his dear Son, to renwaken love and trust in our hearts. You should put aside the temptation to seek after strange beliefs, and should cling close and "lean hard" on God, never doubting. "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him," said Job in his affliction. And if we resolutely trust and earnestly seek, he will send comfort and reassurance. If you can do so, get two or three Christian friends to reinforce your prayers with their own in your behalf.

J. E. B., Pensacola, Fla. Your question whether it is a good thing for a person "to be afraid to do wrong and afraid to stain the family honor; to be afraid of losing the respect and confidence of friends," suggests a trait which, though admirable in itself, yet does not quite measure up to the Christian requirements. The real Christian is so not through fear, but through love. He follows the precepts and example of Christ because his heart is drawn toward him, and he takes a greater pleasure in such service than he could if he were merely striving against temptation because of the fear of the loss of prestige and the dread of the world's censure. The motives you suggest are admirable in their way, but it is the love of Christ and our fellow man that "constraineth us" to do good, to live purely and walk uprightly, not for the sake of appearances but because it is the divine will and command. The disciple of Jesus "vaunteth not himself"; he is a reborn man, redeemed from sin, and he feels that he has a mission which inspires him with love for all mankind.

S. A. L., West Point, Ind. 1. Please explain the seventh chapter of Hebrews. 2. Who was Melchisedec?

1. The Epistle to the Hebrews presents a series of comparisons. Christ is greater than the angels or than Moses and Joshua; and the rest into which he leads the soul greater than the rest of Canaan (chapter 1-4). His priesthood is greater than that of the Levitical priests, and brings a perfection that was not attainable through them (chapters 5-7). The sacrifice of Christ's body on the cross makes possible a cleansing more perfect than the cleansing furnished by the ancient sacrifices (chapters 8-10.) We receive all these benefits of Christ's ministry and sacrifice by faith (chapter 11). The seventh chapter forms one item of the second division. The argument is that just as Melchisedec, who came before Levi and the whole Mosaic priesthood, was greater than the Levitical priests, so Christ, who came after, and sprang from another tribe, is greater than they. The salvation they offered was incomplete; his salvation is complete (verse 25). 2. Melchisedec was a priest and king of whom nothing is known except what is told in the brief account in Genesis of his appearing to Abraham (Gen. 14: 17-20). Abraham paid tithes to him, and received his blessing. Some exegetes have held the extreme view that Melchisedec was actually Christ, in an earlier incarnation, but this view has little support. The strong statements of verse 3 are taken as signifying only the complete mystery surrounding his birth and ancestry (note Revised Version reading "genealogy" instead of "descent"), his extreme sanctity and high-priestly appointment which was independent of any ancestral priesthood. Origen held that Melchisedec was an angel incarnate.

Mrs. L. P., Rosehall, Ontario. It is quite true that the mental attitude exerts a great influence on bodily conditions. Cheerfulness is conducive to health. But mental attitude is not everything, though some may tell you so. You should take the means which lie within your power to improve your health, and ask God's blessing upon them. Remember, too, that to-day as of old, the Lord is able both to forgive our trespasses and heal our diseases.

G. F. C., Woodland, Mich. The Herodians were a class of Jews in the time of Christ, who were partisans of Herod, either of a political or religious sort, or both. It appears that when the ecclesiastical authorities of Judea held a council against the Saviour, they associated with themselves the Herodians, and sent an embassy to Jesus designing to trap him in his speech. As tetrarch of Galilee, Herod Antipas was the ruler of the province which was Jesus' home, and the Jews doubtless argued that Herod would be pleased if they could convict Jesus of being a rival claimant to the crown. The Pharisees were a Jewish sect who held rigidly aloof from other sects, claimed to be free from every kind of impurity and united to keep the Mosaic laws, to which they gave the closest study. They were frequently denounced by our Saviour for their self-righteousness and their assumption of superior piety. The Sadducees were another sect, originally a religious body, but which had developed into a body of freethinkers. They rejected the oral law and the prophets, but believed in the Pentateuch; they denied the resurrection and they held different views from other Jews on various other important points while claiming to be the most aristocratic and conservative of all the bodies.

THE HEAD OF THE CARAVAN ENTERING DAMASCUS

BY PERRY H. MURDICK

HERMON, crowned with the snows of ages, looked down upon us as we crept across the plain. Our train had puffed and panted up the slopes leading to the plains of Gadara, and wound, like a serpent, on toward the plains of Bashan. The stars of the Syrian sky began to peep out, while the white turban of Hermon was tinted with the pink and gold of the setting sun.

The quiet of the plains and the reveries of Hermon are broken when we reach Damascus, the oldest city in the world. We are met by a howling, shouting, gesticulating troop of carriage-drivers. The pushing, ill-smelling, rag-bedecked modern Jehus get us settled in their chariots, and we are off on a mad whirl through this city of whirls. It is like a dog-fight with at least a half hundred dogs participating, when we pull out at the start. Every driver has an idea that he must be first, and, regardless of life or limb, he puts his steeds through the streets. At last we are set down in the midst of the city, a city that can claim life without a break from its founding back in the dim dawn of the world's history. When Abram crossed the desert from Haran four thousand years ago, this city was standing. (See Gen. 14: 15 and 15: 2.) She dates back to the time of the Pharaohs in Egypt; in fact, she was old when Greece and Rome were striplings in years. Rome may be termed the "Eternal City," but Damascus is twice as old, and though her streets have run red with blood of battle and rapine many times, she has not been overthrown.

"Babylon is an heap in the desert and Tyre a ruin on the shore," but Damascus remains.

Was there ever such a place to see the nations of the earth parading together? Here in the marketplace are motley crowds of Persians, Moors, Afghans, Indians, Egyptians, Sudanese, Jews, Bedouins, Druses, Turks, Europeans. The streets—so crooked, so narrow, so dirty, so full of life, with that strange spell of the desert upon them! The residences as seen from the street are ugly and disappointing enough, yet like old barns and tumble-down mills at home, are fascinating and picturesque.

The hotel in which we stay is called the "Grand Victoria," but it is above a blacksmith shop and a saddle shop. The lower stories are mostly blank, bare walls. From the upper stories project balconies of latticed oriels, some of which extend so far over the street as to make it easy for the veiled damsel of the harem to leap across.

In contrast with these plain exteriors, the interiors are often exquisitely beautiful, having an open court paved with marble and a fountain fed by the waters of the Abana, tinkling and splashing through the hot hours of the day, and wooing one to rest during the cool of the evening. Palms, orange trees and oleanders stand here and there. Within the house you discover rooms cold and formal to an American, but brilliant with Oriental hangings, brasses and inlaid mother-of-pearl furnishings. Damascus is perhaps the second city in importance in the mind of the Mohammedans. It is a garden city, made to be indeed an oasis in the desert by the Abana River, which, finding life in the snows of Hermon's breast, flows through this city with increasing volume as if it intended to regenerate the desert, into which it pours all its wealth, and does veritably make this section to "blossom as the rose." It is not to be wondered at that Mohammed drew rein outside the walls when first he saw the city, and said: "Since man can enter paradise but once, I will not enter this earthly paradise lest I be shut out from the heavenly!"

This stream of ravishing beauty, with waters green as emerald, rushing, foaming, as it goes, makes its banks rejoice in poplars, willows, terebinths and palms! I did not wonder that Naaman turned from the prophet in disgust when told that he must dip seven times in Jordan. Hear him say: "Are not the waters of the Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than these?"

WINDOW FROM WHICH PAUL WAS LOWERED IN A BASKET

There are nearly enough mosques and shrines here to make it possible for you to have a different one for every day in the year. But there are but two or three that you will care to spend any time on. You pass through the street called Straight and find yourself at the outer gate of the mosque Jai 'a el Amwy, which ranks next in sanctity only to those at Mecca, Medina and Jerusalem. This has a history: First, a heathen temple dedicated to the god Rimmon, then a Christian church, and now a Mohammedan mosque. Evidences of its Christian history still are there: the original gateway remains, as the chalice and patten on the bronze doors testify, and then a portion of an arch with a Greek inscription which seems singularly out of place and almost prophetic. It reads "Thy kingdom, O Christ, is an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations." Does it not speak of the day when "He shall reign from sea to sea?" Perhaps the Moslems have let it remain as an evidence of its untruthfulness in their minds.

The thought that this is a very sacred place of worship accompanies one, but it is hard to understand why this place is to remain forty years after the rest of the world is destroyed, so that the faithful may pray in it. They say, too, that one prayer said here is worth thirty thousand elsewhere.

Climb that minaret on the south corner two hundred and fifty feet in height, called the "Minaret Isa," or Minaret of Jesus, and see the street called Straight running for a mile and a quarter, like a great sewer-pipe, across the city.

The supreme charm of Damascus to the Christian heart is the conversion of St. Paul, which occurred here in the house of one Judas in this same street called "Straight." Just around the corner from Judas lived Ananias; and it was this good man that God sent to Paul to greet him with the handclasp of a brother. There are two spots just outside the city, each of which is pointed out as the place where suddenly there shined around Paul a light from heaven brighter than the noonday sun. One of these traditional spots must be incorrect, and both are probably so. But the great truth remains that somewhere along this road God spoke to this man, and immediately the new vision inspired a new desire and caused him to cry to the Christ whom he had persecuted: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" From this very place began the most effective force in the Christianization of the world, next to the cross of Christ—the career of the apostle Paul. Outside the city the visitor is also shown the window in the wall from which it is said Paul was lowered in a basket when it became necessary for him to flee for his life. (Acts 9: 23-25). Across the road from this is the traditional site of the home of Naaman the leper. It is in truth at this very time a leper colony with about thirty lepers making their home there.

The sun came out of the east with all its splendor this Sabbath morning. All nature was smiling and breathing the quiet and peace of God's day. Not so with man: he had come forth with blackness and night in his heart and turmoil and rancor of hatred. Not for fifty years had there been such a day in this

REBEL SUCCESSES IN MEXICO

GENERAL VILLA says he expects to eat his Christmas dinner in Mexico City. As forecasted in our report of the Mexican situation last week, the success of the rebel arms has apparently brought the end of the Huerta régime within sight. With the close of November many conflicting rumors were rife, some going so far as to declare that Huerta was arranging for his abdication.

The first of December found the State of Chihuahua at the mercy of General Villa. General Mercado, commander of the Federal forces in the north, issued a proclamation that the Huerta Government was bankrupt and abandoned the territory to the rebel forces. The city of Juarez was evacuated, many wealthy families fleeing to the border, among them General Terranzas, carrying over two million dollars of treasure. Governor Moye declared the capital rebel territory. To the south, the rebel forces obtained control of the district about Tuxpam, where the Cowdray oil properties are located. Admiral Fletcher was assured by their officers that no violence to the property of foreigners would be attempted provided the Cowdray oil interests complied with the rebel demand that no fuel should be supplied to the Mexican Railway—a British concern. By this means the rebels will seriously interfere with railway communication between Vera Cruz and Mexico City.

On December 2 General Villa with an army of ten thousand men prepared to form a conjunction with General Carranza for a joint march upon Mexico City. The boast of the rebel general is that he will surround Mexico City with twenty thousand troops. Pancho Villa's sudden rise to prominence is a remarkable illustration of the fortunes of war. Six months ago Villa, who was a bandit, joined the rebel army as a humble private, his total personal effects being a somewhat rough suit, a borrowed revolver and a pony. Pancho Villa, ex-bandit, has become Pancho Villa, patriot general, and may yet become president of Mexico after a short term of General Carranza as provisional president.

GEN. VILLA (CENTRAL SEATED FIGURE IN WHITE HAT) AND STAFF, WATCHING FEDERALS SHELL THE POSITION

The President's message was read on December 2 containing the statement that "there could be no certain prospect of peace in America until General Huerta has surrendered his usurped authority in Mexico." It is reported that Huerta in reply to inquiries as to his opinion on the message, replied with a grin that if the civil war in Mexico were to continue many years it would still find him fighting until the end. His attitude continues to be one of stolid indifference to outside opinion. The arrival of seven Federal officers at Juarez ready to make terms of peace for their commands is significant of the condition of the Federal forces. On the third of December the evacuation of Guaymas on the Gulf of California was reported to be well under way.

The situation is one of uncertainty as to the actual strength and intentions of Huerta. It is believed that he is at the end of his finances, and reports of a loan of several million pesos are not credited. Movements of the troops are too spasmodic to permit of a clear idea of the plan of campaign. The Constitutionalists, as the rebels prefer to be called, are for the present in the ascendant.

ancient city. It was on the ninth of July, 1860, that Moslem fanaticism had last broken loose in this part of the Turkish Empire at the cost of six thousand Christian lives.

As we came from our rooms in the hotel, the glories of the new day were manifest on every hand. Stepping out upon the balcony overlooking the street and the Abana River that goes singing through the center of the streets, we saw, at that very early hour, great crowds of men, women and children hurrying toward the "horse market" or public square just below the hotel.

Why this extra stir and this babel of voices? We turn our eyes in the direction in which they are moving. There are three tripods on the bridge over the river, and hanging on these three men, certainly a strange sight for American eyes.

We are not content until we get out in this jostling crowd and see for ourselves, and by questioning learn the meaning of this public hanging. These men that hang there are Druses, representatives of those people who inhabit the plains of Bashan and the Lebanons. We had stopped for lunch at Daraa on our way up, and had seen Turkish troops quartered there. These fellows, splendid looking men, tall, muscular, full-bearded, in middle life, had come from that locality. They were said to be leaders in a revolt against the Turks. Each bore a placard on his breast, telling his name and his crime.

These Druses are a people of mixed origin, about ninety thousand in number, derived from Kurdish, Persian and Arab stock. They are a wild, fierce people who have maintained their religious and political independence for near nine centuries. Their faith is uncertain; very little is known about them, as they will not permit a Christian to live among them for any length of time, but what has been learned seems to indicate a mixture of Christian Gospels, the Koran and Sufi allegories.

These people, though really under Turkish rule, have always insisted upon a sort of independence, refusing to pay taxes or support the government. Now the Young Turk Party, desiring to raise certain moneys, sent representatives demanding that these Druses pay taxes, and furthermore that they pay back taxes of five years' standing. This they refused to do, on the ground that their forefathers had never paid taxes, and why should they? Secondly, the Turks demanded that they give up their arms. This they also refused to do, on the ground that they needed them to protect their interests from the Bedouins. The third demand was that their young men must enlist in the Turkish army; they likewise refused to comply. At once the Turks sent policemen to collect; the Druses killed them; then came a small army; the Druses drove them off with loss of life, and at once began an open rebellion, which resulted in considerable loss to the Turks, both in life and in plunder from certain little villages. During the winter a force of sixty thousand soldiers had been sent out to crush the Druses; it was done, their leaders taken prisoners, and here were three hanging by their necks this Christian Sabbath morning.

MODERN COVERED "STREET THAT IS CALLED STRAIGHT"

All day long the curious and morbid throng of Mohammedans poured in from the surrounding country to see the spectacle. Our good "Sugar" and "George," the dragomans, got very much excited and alarmed, and ordered all our party in doors, fearing lest these easily excited Easterners should make this a demonstration against the Christians.

As we drove back from visiting the scenes connected with the life and experiences of St. Paul, our ears were greeted with the sound of weird singing and fanatical uproar. Right down the street came this marching, or rather, jumping, shouting mob of men and boys. Our carriages were held up and our hearts beat fast as we wondered whether we were to be figures in an uprising against the followers of Christ. One great Arab led in this antiphonal chant, waving his arms and wailing like a lost soul, while the hoarse cry of the mob shricked back their response. What are they doing? Where are they going? What are they saying?

"Sugar" says they are singing praises to Allah for the death of the fanatics, and making merry that the bodies have now been taken down and thrown outside the walls.

This has been a "Red Sunday" indeed! There has been little to remind one of the quiet Sabbaths of home, little that indicates the spirit of Jesus, little that speaks of the love of God, little to make the traveler realize that he is on the border of Holy Land.

We are glad it has passed, and glad that we do not often participate in such scenes. Most of us are happier and breathe easier when we find ourselves once more, after a Sabbath night of rest, on our train winding our way back to the peace and quiet of Galilee.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

PRESIDENT WILSON read his annual address before Congress at one o'clock on Wednesday, December 2. It was his fourth appearance personally before the House in his executive capacity. The delivery of the message consumed only about thirty minutes, and it was received throughout with marked enthusiasm. Interest centered mainly on his deliverances on the Mexican question, anti-trust legislation and presidential primaries.

He began by reviewing our relations with other governments and said: "The country, I am thankful to say, is at peace with all the world, and many happy manifestations about us of a growing cordiality and sense of community of interest among the nations foreshadowing an age of settled peace and goodwill. More and more readily each decade do the nations manifest their willingness to bind themselves by solemn treaty to the processes of peace, the processes of frankness and fair concessions. So far the United States has stood at the front of such negotiations.

"She will, I earnestly hope and confidently believe, give fresh proof of her sincere adherence to the cause of international friendship by ratifying the several treaties of arbitration awaiting renewal by the Senate.

"There is only one possible standard by which to determine controversies between the United States and other nations, and that is compounded of these two elements: Our own honor and our obligations to the peace of the world. A test so compounded ought easily to be made to govern both the establishment of new treaty obligations and the interpretation of those already assumed."

The President then proceeded to discuss the situation in Mexico and said:

"There is but one cloud upon our horizon. That has shown itself to the south of us, and hangs over Mexico.

"There can be no certain prospect of peace in America until General Huerta has surrendered his usurped authority in Mexico; until it is understood on all hands, indeed, that such pretended governments will not be countenanced or dealt with by the government of the United States.

"We are friends of constitutional government in America; we are more than its friends; we are its champions; because in no other way can our neighbors, to whom we would wish in every way to make proof of our friendship, work out their own development in peace and liberty.

"The attempt to maintain one at the City of Mexico has broken down, and a mere military despotism has been set up, which has hardly more than the semblance of national authority. It originated in the usurpation of Victoriano Huerta, who, after a brief attempt to play the part of a constitutional president, has at last cast aside even the pretense of legal right and declared himself dictator.

"As a consequence, a condition of affairs now exists in Mexico which has made it doubtful whether even the most elementary and fundamental rights either of her own people or of the citizens of other countries resident within her territory can long be successfully safeguarded, and which threatens, if long continued, to imperil the interests of peace, order, and tolerable life in the lands immediately to the south of us.

"Even if the usurper had succeeded in his purposes, in despite of the constitution of the republic and the rights of its people, he would have set up nothing but a precarious and hateful power, which could have lasted but a little while, and whose eventual downfall would have left the country in a more deplorable condition than ever. But he has not succeeded.

"He has forfeited the respect and the moral support even of those who were at one time willing to see him succeed. Little by little he has been completely isolated. By a little every day his power and prestige are crumbling and the collapse is not far away.

"We shall not, I believe, be obliged to alter our policy of watchful waiting. And then, when the end comes, we shall hope to see constitutional order restored in distressed Mexico by the concert and energy of such of her leaders as prefer the liberty of their people to their own ambitions."

The remainder of the message deals largely with domestic affairs. He urges action on the banking and currency bill and begs "that the whole energy and attention of the Senate be concentrated upon it until the matter is successfully disposed of." He also urges that special provision be made for facilitating the credits needed by the farmers of the country and declares that the pending currency bill would be a great service to agriculturists, putting them upon an equal footing with other business men.

"The farmers and the government will henceforth work together as real partners in this field, where we now begin to see our way very clearly and where many intelligent plans are already being put into execution. The treasury of the United States has, by a timely and well-considered distribution of its deposits, facilitated the moving of the crops in the present season and prevented the scarcity of available funds too often experienced at such times.

"But we must not allow ourselves to depend upon extraordinary expedients. We must add the means by which the farmer may make his credit constantly and easily available and command when he will the capital by which to support and expand his business. We lag behind many other great countries of the modern world in attempting to do this."

Regarding monopolies the message says:

"I think that all thoughtful observers will agree that the immediate service we owe the business communities of the country is to prevent private monopoly more effectually than it has yet been prevented. I think it will be easily agreed that we should let the Sherman anti-trust law stand, unaltered, as it is, with its debatable ground about it, but that we should as much as possible reduce the area of that debatable ground by further and more explicit legislation; and should also supplement that great act by legislation which will not only clarify it but also facilitate its administration and make it fairer to all concerned."

A special message to Congress on this subject is promised later. The President recognizes the great importance of the business men of the country being relieved of "all uncertainties of law with regard to their enterprises and investments" and that they should be relieved of embarrassment and set free to prosper."

The message urges prompt legislation providing for primary elections throughout the country at which the voters of the several parties may choose their nominees for the Presidency without the intervention of nominating conventions. He believes the legislation should provide for retaining the party conventions, but only for the purpose of declaring and accepting the verdict of the primaries and for formulating party platforms. These conventions "should consist not of delegates chosen for this single purpose, but of the nominees for Congress, the nominees for vacant seats in the Senate of the United States, the Senators whose terms have not yet closed, the national committees, and the candidates for the presidency themselves, in order that platforms may be framed by those responsible to the people for carrying them into effect."

Passing to the question about colonies, he declares that Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines, while they are ours, are not to be selfishly exploited; they must be administered for the people who live in them with the same sense of responsibility that we feel toward our own people. The Philippines he regards as a separate question. We must hold steadily in view their ultimate independence, the foundations for which must be thoughtfully and permanently laid. We have already granted the Filipinos a majority in both houses of their legislative body by appointing five instead of four native citizens to the membership of the commission. This will enable us to prove their capacity in council and their sense of responsibility, and will make the way clearer for the next step to follow. We should proceed gradually, extending and perfecting the system of self-government in the islands and modifying our course as experience shows success or failure."

The message says that the people of Alaska should be granted the full territorial form of government and "the government should itself build and administer the railways and control the ports and terminals in the interests of all who wish to use them for the service and development of the country and its people."

"But," the message continues, "the construction of railways is only the first step; is only thrusting in the key to the storehouse and throwing back the lock and opening the door. How the tempting resources of the country are to be exploited is another matter, to which I shall take the liberty of from time to time calling your attention, for it is a policy which must be worked out by well-considered stages, not upon theory, but upon lines of practical expediency."

The President holds that in justice to the railway employees of the country a fair and effective employers' liability act should be passed which would be of equal advantage to both the railroads and the men.

Reform legislation is needed for the benefit of our American sailors, and also for the assuring of greater safety at sea. The message closes with an expression of the pleasure the President has experienced in co-operating with both houses of Congress in labor for the common service.

PRESIDENT WILSON READING HIS FIRST FORMAL MESSAGE

Mr. Wilson's revival of the custom of the personal address to Congress appears to be popular with all parties. The scene in the crowded hall of the House of Representatives on this occasion amounted to a personal demonstration to the President

PRESS OPINIONS ON THE MESSAGE

New York Herald, December 3

THE President's annual address is most inspiring. It heartens, it animates, it stimulates—it soothes. Mr. Wilson inspires a belief that begets confidence; it spells confidence with a capital C. The most impressive thing about the address is the note that pervades it and yet is not put in words. As we read it it carries to the country the information that the task of "making over the nation," so far as the pocketbook of the investor is concerned, is well nigh through its first stage. The tariff has been revised and there has been no panic. Broadly speaking, there remain only the necessary amendments to the anti-trust law, but these are not likely to be very radical. He has written the message exactly as a trained mariner would navigate his ship, with an eye upon the barometer. . . .

The Beginning of Far-Reaching Changes

New York Times, December 3.

THE state of the Union will not long remain what it is or what it has been from the beginning if the most important and far-reaching recommendation of the President's address is adopted by Congress and the country. We mean his urging the prompt enactment of legislation for primary elections in which the voters may choose nominees for the Presidency "without the intervention of nominating conventions."

The President is firm and justly firm in his attitude toward Mexico. Our policy thus far has sealed up Alaskan resources. Mr. Wilson would have them developed. That is an advance and a distinct gain.

DISCOURAGED YOUTH

*A SERMON BY REV. HUGH BLACK, D.D.

TEXT: "Fathers, provoke not your children, lest they be discouraged." Col. 3: 21

IN PASSAGES like this Paul shows how the Christian faith accepts the fact of the different relations in which we find ourselves, and deals its impartial justice all round. The precepts are simple. They are to be obeyed not as strict rules, but as expressing the spirit of the religion we profess. They begin with the obligation resting on Christians as members of families. It is only one aspect of that with which we are concerned at present, but we understand the Christian method better if we notice how Paul treats it as a whole. The family life of the time was most corrupt, and Christianity purified it not by revolutionary methods but by instilling into it the pure spirit of love. We are all placed in definite relations, as husband and wife, children and parents, brothers and sisters, masters and servants. There are some relationships over which we have no control, and others we can to some extent control; but in either case we cannot escape the responsibilities. Every new position carries a new responsibility with it. There should be no light-headedness in entering into a new relationship, such as marriage, and there should be no shirking the obligations resting on us in any present relationship. The one is folly; the other is crime. Wives, husbands, fathers, children, servants, masters are all enjoined to act according to their place and function in their respective spheres; but not singly. The one corresponds to the other, and both together make up the whole. Every duty is connected with a right; and every right brings with it a corresponding duty. We have all our rights, whether we get them or not—the wife as against the husband, the child as against the parent, the servant as against the master. We have all our duties, whether we do them or not; and our duties correspond exactly with our rights. The duties of men and women in the relationships of life are mutual, not one-sided, but balanced on either side.

Reciprocity in the Home

Notice how Paul groups them together, showing first the one side, and then the reverse side. Is the wife to submit to the husband? Then the husband is to love the wife. Are children to obey parents? Then parents must not provoke and discourage the children. Are servants to obey their masters? Then masters must be just and generous in their treatment. We are good at claiming and maintaining our own rights; are we so careful to maintain the rights of others? We are loud upon the duties that others owe us; do we feel as strongly the duties we owe them? Our duty is just another person's right. One side is turned toward him; the other toward us. Other people have rights which we must respect and gladly concede. Even slaves have rights; for, of course, it was to slaves Paul wrote when he spoke of servants. This was a startling idea at a time when even in law a slave was looked on as a thing, a possession with no inherent rights. Even children have rights. This also was startling at a time when the power of a Roman father over his children was practically unlimited. Obedience was demanded from the children; and Paul asks them to give that obedience cheerfully and willingly as to the Lord. But he insists that the father also has duties. "Children, obey your parents. Parents, provoke not your children."

You have often heard the one side enforced; but this converse side must not be forgotten. Indeed, if there is any difference between the two, this one is the more important. If parents did their duty to their children, there would perhaps be less unfilial and unnatural conduct to parents. And for another thing, they should know their duty to their children better than the children can be expected to know their duty to them. I do not speak of the debt parents owe society and owe the children for being their parents. There would be fewer thoughtless, foolish marriages if that aspect were always considered; but I speak at present of the duties involved in the present relationship, accepting the facts as they are. I know that the subject is an unusual one, and some who would listen with approval when the lesson of obedience is enforced upon children may object to the turning of the tables. It is the old story. We listen willingly to the statement of our rights, but are just a trifle deaf on the subject of our duties.

But having made clear that children have rights, natural and inherent rights because of their position in the family for their presence in which they had no say; and having asserted that parents have toward them corresponding duties, I would not be tempted to spend more time on this (I hope admitted) general question, or to dissipate attention by referring to the hundred and one claims children have. The claims to care, food, protection, education, and such like are recognized in every Christian community. I propose to focus our thought upon an aspect of home-training often overlooked. It is found in the text, "Provoke not your children, that they be not discouraged."

What Paul meant is quite evident. After telling children to obey he turns to the parents and asks them to make it easy for them to obey. He warns against provoking or irritating youth by overexactingness and constant interferences and fault-finding. Authority is good and necessary, but perpetual exercise of authority in small things as well as large is disastrous both for the authority and for the real good of children. It prevents growth in the qualities of manhood. It discourages, takes away the hope of ever being able to please, and so keeps from the attempt. All education and discipline need wise interpretation of powers. Every power put into the hands of a man carries with it the possibility of abuse. The natural power which is a parent's due—and which in its measure is a teacher's due—is of course given to be used. A man must rule his household. Children must be trained, disciplined, guided, restrained. It is no appeal for anarchy. Even a despotism is better than no government at all. But if little ones are under your power, and rightly so, they are in your hands not for your pleasure and that your will may be done. They are human beings, immortal souls, with inalienable rights. Sins against them will recoil most terribly against the sinner. We see them recoiling every day, and that is why a sermon on this text is necessary, though you may never have heard one on it before.

The Things that Discourage

The first natural cause we think of for discouragement in the young is overseverity, though that is not so common to-day as it has been. Still, it is easy to overstep the line, to be too exacting upon their obedience. The danger of overseverity is not very pressing when children are young; for then they are so weak and helpless and their ways are so winning that they find the road to all hearts. Then sometimes the danger is the opposite, of overleniency, letting whims form into habits and petulancy become a vice of temper. The danger of being too exacting is greatest at that undefined period when boys and girls are no longer children and yet cannot by the greatest stretch even of their own imagination be called men and women. It is a difficult time, as all guardians and teachers know; and it is not a time to have the hand ever on the bearing rein. The Christian parent who has trained his children faithfully and lovingly must at such a time have a little faith—faith in the Master to whom he dedicated his children, and faith in the children themselves. Their hearts will turn sooner or later toward home. "The thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts." Novelty, new surroundings, adventures, sometimes enchant the imagination and lead captive the heart; but the mind will soon turn with longing to the place of love and peace. Yea, if even—which God forbid!—a son forgets his mother's love and his father's God, and lives in some far country of sin and folly, the memory of the beautiful past will be the only chain that binds him to good, and the cry will break from his heart, "I will arise and go to my father."

When we speak of overseverity producing sullenness or despair, it usually works through an injured feeling of justice. Injustice will drive even wise men mad; and certainly the harshness of injustice rankles in the mind of the young. They have an innate sense of justice, and when that is outraged a great wrong is done. They may not be able to explain it, but instinctively they know it not to be right. That is why a system of favoritism does so much moral harm. Rousseau in his Confessions speaks of the effect a small injustice had upon his life when he was a boy. He was wrongly punished for something of which he was innocent. The passion it raised in him was so great that fifty years after when writing about it he felt his pulse quicken. At the time the sense of injustice almost suffocated him, and to relieve his feelings he kept screaming, "Carnifex! carnifex!" "torturer!" "tormentor!" The sentiment of indignation left its scar on his heart; and that incident was the end of his childhood. The effect of it, he openly confesses, was that he was less ashamed of doing wrong, and only more afraid of being found out. He learned to dissemble, to rebel, to lie.

Companionship the Ideal

It is not the mere strictness, but the injustice which wounds. Martin Luther said to a friend: "Be temperate with your children; punish them if they lie or steal, but be just in what you do." He referred to a time when his mother beat him about some nuts till the blood came. He knew that he had done wrong, and that his mother meant well, but he felt that the punishment from its severity became injustice. His school days were not happy either. "Never be hard with children," he said afterwards. "I was once flogged fifteen times in one forenoon over the conjugation of a verb. Punish if you will, but be kind too, and let the sugar plum go with the rod." Luther himself, as you know, was very tender with children all his life. Biography is full of examples of the evil effects of a loveless youth. When we read the story of Byron's early life with his heart gradually hardened by neglect worse than cruelty, we can trace the germs of his fierce temper, his selfish lust, his sad life. He was early discouraged, and was perpetually provoked; and the result was a sullen youth, and the shipwreck of great hopes. Great is the responsibility for all failure of life; but where does the responsibility end and where does it begin?

St. Paul makes his warning about harshness very tender by the reason he adds, "that they be not discouraged," that they may not lose heart and hope. "A broken spirit, the bane of youth," says Bengel. It is at least the end of youth. Youth is the time of hope. The world needs the early vigor and the sweet, strong faith of youth. It is a terrible thing when in any line the young are discouraged and have lost hope. It makes them old before their time, gives them the vices of age without its virtues. Who would wilfully rob them of their hope? Not one who loves them and wishes them well. And yet this is the warning to parents to avoid discouraging their own children. Something like this is the great temptation of superior age and experience. Men make too much of mere length of living, and crush down the opinions and endeavors of the young by a grand assumption of wisdom. Some among the older ones even set themselves deliberately to discourage and irritate. "Nothing that is good is ever done now: this generation is all wrong; young people are sadly degenerated"—until the young begin to think, "Well, we must be pretty bad if we have degenerated from that."

We who are older or are getting older lose our rightful influence over the young by foolish croaking or nagging, or however our attitude should be described. We lose much when we alienate them from us; and, what is more serious, they lose much. They lose the benefit of our wisdom, and experience, and advice. If your children do not come to you for advice and help, if they do not bring their joys and sorrows, may it not be because you discouraged them so that they have not the heart or inclination to come? Be it yours to encourage, to inspire, to guide the young, to turn their energies into the right channels. Character is developed in children by a

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, December 21. Luke 2: 25-40. "A light to lighten the Gentiles." That was the wonder of wonders. Hitherto the light had been supposed to be for Israel alone; and now a heavenly splendor was to fall upon the Gentiles. Hitherto the light had been thought of as a lamp, illuming a single place; now it was to be a sun, shedding its glory upon a world. The "people that sat in darkness" are now to see "a great light." New regions are to be occupied; there is to be daybreak everywhere! "The sun of righteousness is arisen, with healing in his wings."

"To lighten the Gentiles!" And thus the heavenly beams have come to thee and me, to Europe and America, and to all the nations of the earth. The amazing privilege is our personal inheritance. We are born to glorious rights in Christ Jesus. But a wealthy heir may neglect his inheritance. We may have the light and neglect our garden. We may have all the favors of a blessed clime and yet our life may be like a wilderness. The Gentiles may have the light, and may yet be children of the darkness. It is ours to believe in the light, that our lives may become "light in the Lord."

MONDAY, December 22. Numbers 11: 10-25. "Is the Lord's hand waxed short?" That is the question with which to challenge our doubts and fears. Bring the fear up to the bar and cross-examine it about the Lord. Is anything wrong with the Lord? Have his resources weakened with the expenditure of the years? Has his grace lost its virtue? Has his love lost its strength? Has his wisdom waned, and has his discernment grown dim? What has happened to the Lord that we follow him with trembling? Has his hand waxed short, and are his enemies beyond him?

The mere asking of the questions is a bracing tonic to the soul. For the questions fix our eyes upon the right things. If we look upon our own wills we feel impotent. If we scan our own minds we feel ignorant. If we contemplate our own hearts we feel that our love will not hold patience for the long campaign. The self-view will lead us to the juniper tree, and we shall lie prostrate in despair. The God-view will take us to the mount, and we shall gaze upon the wonders of Almightiness, and upon the unsearchable riches of grace.

TUESDAY, December 23. Numbers 13: 1-3; 25-33. "There we saw the giants." And that was enough! They gave an evil report of the land and counseled retreat. It is an evil inclination that seizes the soul. We see the giants, and we are afraid of defeat, and we are tempted to refuse them battle. And we often prefer dishonor with safety to the chances of honorable defeat. And so we waste in ease when we might grow strong in battle.

Every fine road has its giants. Every noble crusade has its gigantic tasks. Everything worth doing is expensive doing. Every holy conquest costs precious blood. Nay, it is true that the more strenuous we become the bigger and fiercer become our foes. When we "take things easy" and stroll through flowery roads in indifference, it does not require a giant to deal with us. But when we put on our strength and address ourselves to turn out the usurping possessors of Emmanuel's land, we shall find a giant at every turning. But what of that? Giants are only incidents in the way of the knights of King Jesus. "Who shall dream of shrinking, by our Captain led?" "Let us go up at once and possess the land."

WEDNESDAY, December 24. Numbers 20: 1-13. In the reckoning of our sins we must never omit the sin of our unbelief. "Because ye believed me not!" That was the sin of Moses and Aaron. Mistrust can be our worst offense. There is no opprobrium we can put upon another which is deeper and darker than to refuse him our confidence. When one man says to another, "I cannot trust you," he has no more awful word in his speech. Everything is there which is accusing and wounding; it is a verdict against the heart.

And yet this is what we practically say to our Lord: "I cannot trust Thee!" We fear this, and we fear the other; and our fear really means either that the Lord is not as good as his word, or that he cannot redeem the promises he has made. We cannot trust him! We can better trust ourselves. And so we leave his counsels, and we take to our own. And in forsaking our Master we once more crucify him afresh, and put him to open shame.

"Of sin, because they believe not on Me." O Lord, mercifully aid us against all our folly and presumption. Open our hearts to receive thy love, that in the saving strength of thy love we may offer thee the fulness of a consecrated life.

THURSDAY, December 25. John 1: 1-18. "The life was the light of men." And that blessed light has put a new face upon everything. A face illumined is a new face. Who has not seen a plain face become supremely beautiful when lit up with a gracious smile? Who has not seen a commonplace bit of countryside become winsome when the sun has broken through the clouds and thrown upon it transfiguring and revealing beams? We say to one another, as we gaze upon it, "What a difference the sunshine makes!"

Now, our Lord Jesus "lights things up." He gives things new faces by giving them new spirits. "All things become new." He can change duty into privilege by giving it a new heart. He can alter the face of sorrow by giving it a new hope. He can transform work into worship by imparting to it a new mood of consecration. Yes, he lights up everything! He lights up our minds and our hearts, our joys and our griefs, our weddings and our funerals. And at last he will light up death, and the hour of our passing shall be radiant with the hope of immortality.

FRIDAY, December 26. Deuteronomy 34: 1-12. Moses died, but Joshua took up the task he had dropped. "God buries his workmen, but carries on his work." Behind the broken ranks there is the unbroken purpose of the Lord, and the glorious continuity of his grace. If death invaded his plans, and flung its desolations into the holy place, then we should be of all men most miserable. But death is not the master of the house. Death is only one of the servants, and is just ordered about at the bidding of the King. Death runs the King's errands, and in the long run we shall find they are all errands of mercy and love.

Moses died, but his service was not ended. The Salvation Army has a beautiful name for death: they call it "promotion." "John X., promoted to glory December 23, 1913." So runs their gracious record. And it is surely the word of truth. Believers are promoted in the ranks, and death is the season of the translation. They pass "from glory to glory," and part of the glory will be found in vaster vision, wider opportunity, and ampler service of the Lord.

SATURDAY, December 27. Joshua 1: 1-9. "Moses my servant is dead; now therefore arise!" What we do in our bereavements is very momentous. We can sit down and mope in ever-deepening melancholy. I have known widows give up public worship. "No, I've never been to church since he died!" We can resign our offices, and retire into ourselves. We can allow our bereavement to spoil our souls, to maim our fellowships, and to destroy our friendly services. And in this way there is a loss far more terrible than the death itself.

Or, when Moses dies we can arise and take up our appointed work. I like that great, deep, loyal word of Ezekiel: "In the evening my wife died, and in the morning I did as God commanded me." Along that road even death is defeated, being made to minister to the further glory of God. "Moses, my servant, is dead; now therefore . . ." How shall we finish the sentence? What are we writing there in our own bereavements? Is it a record of despair? Or is it a record of holy vow and of renewed consecration?

judicious policy of both intervention and non-intervention—especially let me say non-intervention; for perhaps more are spoiled by too much meddling than by too little. A combination is wanted of care and trust, care over them and trust in them—a new mixture of faith and works. Work for the child as much as you will and in as many lines as he needs; and also have faith in him to let him do some work for himself. Give the child a Christward setting for his life, and Christ the Child-lover will reach him. If anywhere, it is in the home that there should be much of the love that suffereth long and is kind, that seeketh not her own, thinketh no evil and is not easily provoked, and does not lightly provoke. Tenderness does not mean laxity. It is not a feckless affection which is needed. It is the law of love. Love is there, but it is a law. The weak indulgence of one ministers to selfishness as much and has as fatal results as the overseverity of another. The love which watches and prays and works, which counts no toil lost which helps to the great end, the love which is wise as well as gentle, which is strong as well as sweet—that is the highest ideal of influence.

There is no sphere of work so fruitful for God and the world as work among and for children. Christianity is a religion of the homelife. God blesses the world through families. He is the God of Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob. Christ has for ever consecrated the family circle. The child takes his place by right there, and he is the type of the kingdom of heaven. Let the altar of the home be the sacred center for every heart. A good mother—her children rise up and call her blessed: a good father, who can face Him of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named with the beautiful words, "Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath given me!"

PRESIDENT OTTO KOENIG | MANAGING EDITOR GEO. H. SANDISON | SECRETARY THEODORE WATERS

A Message of Good Cheer

PRESIDENT WILSON'S annual message to Congress, which he read personally before the assembled houses, possesses the unusual merit of brevity and clearness. It is an Executive message of good cheer and encouragement throughout; simple, yet dignified, and admirable in its sincerity. Rising above partisanship, it gives that wider outlook on national and international problems which has characterized some of his previous public utterances. He emphasizes anew the unselfish attitude of the administration toward Mexico and our earnest desire to stand as the champion of genuine constitutional government, not in Mexico alone but in all the republics south of us. Domestic problems are treated in tabloid form, yet in language that is sufficiently expressive of the earnest purpose of the administration to deal effectively with these problems. Concerning the monopolies, the President, while holding that the Sherman anti-trust bill should stand unaltered, recognizes that there is a wide debatable ground which should be narrowed down by suitable legislation so that the interests of legitimate business may be duly guarded and fairer treatment be accorded all around. Our business men and those handling enterprises and investments should not be embarrassed by "the uncertainties of law," but "set free to prosper." Nothing would more conduce to the return of general prosperity than the adoption of a just and equitable course toward the business of the country. As a whole, the message must be accepted as another indication of the President's desire to make his administration one of real public service. He gets at the heart of things in a few pithy sentences. He has presented a program which, while it may be regarded as idealistic in some of its features, is none the less practical and sound as a whole. People of all parties or of none will unite in heartily wishing him success in carrying it out.

Profession and Practice

SOME weeks ago a man was arrested in New York for wearing the pin of a fraternal order to which he did not belong. The public was doubtless mildly surprised at this piece of news because, as crimes and misdemeanors go, there would seem to be nothing particularly heinous in simply wearing the emblem of a society of which one is not a member. The man was, we believe, not trying to obtain money by claiming to belong to the order, or to make any other practical use of his false claim. He was simply professing to be something which he was not. A true member of the order happened to meet him and gave the usual "high sign," to which there was no response. Convinced by this failure to get the expected response that the man was an impostor, the fraternity man had him arrested, and he was fined as a misdemeanant.

It is impossible to read of this incident without wondering how many professed Christians could really meet the test of belonging, in deed and in truth, to the spiritual fraternity of Christ. It is easy enough to make an outward profession of belonging to him; it is easy, indeed, to claim with our lips that we are his. In many ways the badge of Christianity may be displayed. But there may come a sudden test, like this greeting flashed mysteriously by the fraternity man, and the soul of the professed Christian finds itself unable or unready to give the response which would stamp it as truly Christ's.

One of the most terrible things about the whole question is that it is so easy to let our vital, spiritual experience slip away. We are very sure that we once were Christians. We remember the warmth of that early love we felt for Christ. But since those days we have been bothered with many things. Many interests, many cares, many sorrows, many joys, have come. Some of them have remained; some have gone. But the present seems a tangle of duties, responsibilities, ambitions, efforts, cares. Our names are still on the church books; our voices are heard occasionally in the prayer meetings. But if some one should unexpectedly flash upon us in a crowded street the sign which only the pure in heart who are really seeing God could recognize, would we catch the signal and be able to make the right response?

It is very possible that tests like this are occurring every day. Who knows what glances we might have given, what words we might have spoken, what deeds our hands might have found to do, if our hearts had been so truly attuned to the thought of Christ that we should have recognized the opportunity? Who knows how many hearts and hands have reached out to us for spiritual help, and because we have lost something from our souls that we used to have, received from us only a stone instead of the bread they longed for?

Do these words bring a dull fear, a strange misapprehension, a wistful longing, a distressing condemnation? It is very easy to find that old-time sense of peace and security and love. The way back to God is always a short way. There is only one really long step in the journey, and that is to make the acknowledgment that we have wandered. Wherever you are, as you read these words you may lift your heart toward God and be received back into the true family of those who believe in him. It is more important than any other business you have to do to-day.

The Children's Friend

A PLEASANT-FACED, black-eyed little woman with a kindly smile and with energy marked in every movement, reached New York a few days ago from Europe. She did not come upon a social mission, although society would be glad to fling wide its doors to welcome her. "I want to see the children in your country," she said, and this explanation is sufficient for all who know the story of Maria Montessori, the creator of "Houses of Childhood," and founder of a system of child education which is growing with such amazing rapidity on two continents that it may yet wholly supplant the older system of Pestalozzi and even that of Froebel. Mme. Montessori's schools are tiny communities, where little tots from three to six years are trained in occupations that keep them pleasantly busy, while developing their minds and leading them to think out things for themselves. From its third year, a child's thirst for knowledge is insatiable, and, knowing this fact, Mme. Montessori has built up her system on a basis of satisfying this universal child desire. Her plan is to let the child find out for himself, leading him only by the merest thread of suggestion rather than telling him how to do the thing, or explaining how he may get over a difficulty or correct a blunder. The child's own initiative will lead to all these discoveries, if properly directed. Leading educational authorities are unstinted in their praise of her method, which they hold to be suited to children even up to the age of ten and especially desirable for defectives. The distinguished visitor will lecture in a dozen or more cities during her stay here. The brilliant success of her method of child-training abroad and the experiments already made in many parts of the United States should assure her a warm and appreciative welcome.

Make America Beautiful

WE HAVE come to the stage where not only efficiency but beauty is being considered in our municipalities. And there is probably no material investment that yields better results. Here and there a town or village, aspiring to higher things, and not satisfied with mere conformity to health laws, has transformed the ugly or the commonplace into the attractive and beautiful. Village improvement societies with simple yet effective measures have made homely places charming, and uniting cordially with nature, have so lifted up their neighbors and themselves into a higher plane of existence where living is really worth while. There is an inspiration in such places that communicates itself unconsciously to all the dwellers, and raises the level of comfort, self-respect and social feeling. Culture thrives in the air, and the love of all that is refining and satisfying. We are better men and women and better citizens for living amid such surroundings.

One practical step which may be taken in this direction is the appointing of an official architect and landscape gardener for each town and county. It should be made legally impossible to erect such unbeautiful buildings as often deface our cities and villages. One private citizen should not have the right to make a blot which will disfigure a whole community. Civilization ought not to mean ugliness, and we are learning that it need not mean that. Make America beautiful.

Our Readers and Ourselves

AT THIS particular season of the year we are made pleasantly aware of the friendly appreciation of our readers by the thousands of letters we are receiving from renewing subscribers. It is a high privilege to be in close sympathetic touch with a great circle of loyal men and women, which is constantly widening, bringing new joys, new friendships and new responsibilities. And it is this element of personal relationship, entering so largely into the life and the social and spiritual activities of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which is the binding link between it and its readers everywhere. Many renewing subscribers express this unreservedly in their letters. "I have been a subscriber for a long time," writes a Pennsylvania reader, "and I never want to do without it." "We have been members of your Family for a good many years," writes a Seattle reader, "and we would never like to miss its weekly visits." "May God bless you in your good work in bringing people into the kingdom. We expect to be readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as long as we live," is the greeting from another Western friend. "We thank you for all the loving messages and the kindly things THE HERALD brings to us," writes another. "We could not get along without it." A California lady writes, "I would feel very lonesome without the weekly visits of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I pray the Father to bless the labors of the staff of the paper and spare their lives for many years of usefulness." A reader from Michigan sends this message: "May the good Lord encourage your work and increase your publication manifold." "It would be almost like giving up one of the family to do without THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. May God bless you," writes a Kentucky subscriber. A large proportion of the letters received from members of our Family Circle express sentiments similar to those above. Invalids and shut-ins and many who live remote from church privileges, tell what a blessing has been brought into their homes. It is confidences like these that encourage the hearts and inspire the pens of all who write for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and we record our humble appreciation.

It is a great help to us when our readers send in their renewals early. You lose nothing by anticipating the date of expiry of your subscription, and you assist us very materially at this unusually busy season. We therefore repeat our invitation to all who have not already renewed, to do so quickly. If you will look at the wrapper of your latest copy, and notice the last date on the line, above the address, that will show you when your subscription expires. By sending in your renewal a week or two ahead, you will place us under an obligation for which we thank you in advance, and you will help to assure uninterrupted service, not only in your own case but in that of many others.

George Washington's Perfect Surveying

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S surveying done in 1751, when as a lad of nineteen he ran lines with chain and compass through the wilderness of the Virginia hills for Lord Fairfax, has been checked up by the government surveyors, who have just made their reports and found the work perfect. Washington, running his lines with primitive instruments and bonfires on hilltops, left monuments and boundaries in which technically educated surveyors using high power transits and all the refined modern instruments have been able to find no variation. Washington's survey-blazes cut into the trunks of trees and long grown over have been rediscovered, and all are several feet higher than those that the woodsmen of to-day would make. Some authorities contend that Washington made them from the saddle with a long-handled ax. The government has been retracing the old lines because it is buying land in the territory through which they run for the new Appalachian forest reserve. What a reliable boy George Washington was! How well did he attend to the task at hand! With his industry, his persistence, his careful mathematical calculation he did this work of surveying so perfectly that the most improved modern science has been unable to find a flaw in the work he did one hundred and sixty-two years ago. This incident of verification only illustrates the complete reliability and competency of Washington for every task of responsibility with which he was entrusted, and shows him the able, true, brave, ideal man called of Providence to the foundation and leadership of the nation. In his mental, moral and spiritual symmetry and stamina, the surveyor of nineteen in the Virginia mountains belonged to the class the apostle addressed in these words:

I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one. (I. John 2: 14.)

The Whipping Post

SIX prisoners — two white men and four negroes—convicted of robbery, received on November 8 a total of ninety-five lashes on their bare backs at the Newcastle County workhouse in Delaware. A week from that time the prisoners received each twenty lashes more, and were then sent to prison for long terms. Delaware is one of the few communities to retain the whipping-post, a relic of a more barbarous age. The constitutionality of the whipping-post feature of the law has never been tested in the courts. It is likely to be, from the general and excited discussion of the case. Governor Charles R. Miller of Delaware thus defines the action at Newcastle in these words:

It is the law, and as such must be obeyed. It has been used as a deterrent of crime. I believe in the whipping-post, for I have seen its advantages. Many criminals on their way from New York to Philadelphia give Delaware a wide berth.

Penalties for the infraction of law are necessary to the happiness and permanency of society, and severe punishment for the highest crimes. While there should be a condemnation of the sickly sentimentalism that would send the condemned criminal notes of sympathy and flowers, in utter forgetfulness of the pangs of those made widows or fatherless by the malefactor, there should be a recognition of the fact that the punitive systems of our age have been behind the times, often cruel and unfair, substituting vengeance for justice, and practicing inhumanities in prison administration which are a disgrace to our civilization. Fortunately there has been a long step in prison reform, to be followed by others at once, and the whipping-post, which has almost disappeared, may be relegated to the museums with other instruments of torture to mark the progress from the cruelty of the past to the standard of Christ, who taught sympathy for the prisoner, and his reformation from moral evil, and who has this to say of those on his right hand:

I was naked and ye clothed me: I was sick and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me. (Matt. 25: 36.)

Ninety-Seven Men Perfect

THERE are only ninety-seven men physically perfect among the 1,256 members of the freshman class of the University of Pennsylvania, according to the statistics compiled by the director of physical education. Though the percentage of physical defectives is large the number is smaller this year than in any previous freshman year. The physical defects include organic or digestive disorders, skin diseases, round shoulders, uneven shoulders, flat chests, flat feet, etc. The university's ophthalmologist reported that more than one-third of the freshman class have defective eyesight. Some of the defects are serious, many are of a trivial character, to be outgrown or remedied by some treatment or other. We live in an imperfect world. Imperfection is written in the orchard blossoms that lie dead on the ground, the ill-shaped fruit on the boughs, the sickly stems, the malformed grain, and the weaklings of the herds and flocks. Human imperfections do not stop with the body; they relate to the mind and the soul. There was but one absolutely perfect Being on earth. He was Jesus Christ, and he commanded his followers to copy his example and become perfect as his Father is perfect. Using the highest standards and the most careful measurements, the moral and spiritual imperfects of the present generation, like those of the past, justify the words of the wise man:

There is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not. (Eccles. 7: 20.)

CENTENNIAL ANGLO-AMERICAN CELEBRATION

FEW events in past years have stirred the imagination of Englishmen like the Anglo-American Exhibition which will be held in London next year, celebrating the centennial of peace between the two nations. The space applied to the British section has already been many times over applied for. The Alimentation Committee now wish for a building twice the size of that allotted to them. The agricultural section has requested a similar addition. The chemical trades section has requested a building four times the size of that thought at first to be sufficient. The only space now being kept open is for American exhibitors. This will remain at their disposal until the beginning of January. After that all the remaining room will be allotted, and exhibitors will be free to begin their installations. The latest development is the establishment of a music, drama and literature section. This section will exemplify the advance of these arts during the past century, and numbers of eminent artists, authors, and dramatists are already organizing a loan collection for this purpose, the like of which was never seen before. It is only natural, in accordance with the main object of the exhibition—the celebration of the centenary of peace between Great Britain and America, and the strengthening of the ties of friendship between the two nations—that the Panama Canal should be in evidence. It is therefore not surprising that one of the most important buildings will be given up to an enormous model of the canal, and that the objects and nature of the great work will form a subject of frequent lectures, with the idea of impressing on the British public the real significance of this great achievement, and inducing the government to reverse its decision not to take part in our Panama celebration in San Francisco. The Anglo-American Centennial in London will aid in the fulfilment of this prophecy: "He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire." (Ps. 46: 9.)

Bichloride Poison Victim Saved

MRS. ADA WELSBERGER of Brooklyn swallowed fifteen grains of bichloride of mercury which she mistook for her cough medicine near it, and was taken to the Bushwick Hospital, where she had a desperate fight of twenty-one days for her life, at the end of which time she was discharged as cured. The treatment was simple. It consisted mainly in wrapping the patient in packs of blankets heated to a high temperature by steam, which were exchanged every few minutes during the whole period of the arduous struggle. The patient was fed on milk, eggs, flour and sweet oil, and the room she occupied was opened to all weather for fresh air. The attending physicians claim that the hot packs relieved the kidneys of the work of throwing off the bodily waste, opened the pores of the skin, and kept the lungs and intestinal tract in working order; that the kind of food given tended to counteract the effects of the poison; and that the abundance of fresh air was an important factor in the result. This case has attracted the attention of the medical fraternity and the public everywhere, and it is to be hoped that the treatment may prove successful in other cases of bichloride poisoning, which seems to be almost an epidemic at this time. Sin is a fatal poison to the soul; no earthly remedy can avail. The Great Physician came from heaven to cure it, of whom it is said:

But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name. (John 20: 31.)

Farming a Profession

THE Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations held its annual convention at Washington, D. C., recently. In its councils and plans farming is elevated from an ordinary occupation into the position of a learned profession. There has been a great advance in agricultural science all over the world, and especially in the United States, in the past twenty-five years. It is the purpose of the higher education to advance agricultural instruction to the university level. Many of the better universities of the country have already introduced an agricultural feature. Dr. True of the Department of Agriculture told how at the University of Cambridge, England, many of the best families took the course of farming, and the same is true in this country. These agricultural colleges give much instruction to the properties of soil and climate, the chemical requirements of plants, the economic value of methods, the business importance of markets, the necessity of sanitation in the life of the farm; and by a well-ordered curriculum they are sending out graduates who will multiply the productiveness of the soil, and with the excellent farmers who have learned wisdom in the school of practical experience, will put their occupation on the plane of a learned profession, and at the head of the agricultural interests of the world. There is a great difference between our modern agricultural methods and those of the primitive farmer of Judea, of whom Christ said:

Behold, a sower went forth to sow. (Matt. 13: 3.)

CONSERVING OUR WATER RESOURCES

THE narrative of the conservation of our water resources in the last two decades when written will constitute one of the most interesting contributions to literature. There are at the present time a number of gigantic enterprises, which will almost magically change the hydrography of this country.

Very recently on the Pacific slope a new aqueduct was inaugurated with great ceremony. This is an engineering achievement representing eight years of work and nearly twenty-five million dollars' expenditure. The reservoir created will deliver two hundred and fifty-eight million gallons of water daily into other reservoirs situated nearly one thousand feet above the city of Los Angeles. This vast body of pure mountain water is brought from the snowy Sierras, two hundred and sixty miles distant, through mountains and across deserts, and is sufficient to supply a city of two million inhabitants. The present population of Los Angeles is short of four hundred thousand. In THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of November 26, mention was made of the greatest power project in the South. This is a nine million dollar lock, dam and power plant erected on the Tennessee River above Chattanooga. This plant ranks with the Niagara Falls great power houses and with those on the Mississippi at Keokuk, Iowa. Congress approved the act authorizing the Chattanooga dam in 1904, and the work was completed and put into operation November 13, this year. The dam is 1,200 feet long, 52 feet high, 11 feet wide at the top, and averages 60 feet wide at the base. The lift of the locks from the lower level to the surface of the lake created back of the dam is 59 feet. The lake is 300 feet long and 60 feet wide, and the leaves of the gates weigh 129 tons each. They are electrically operated with power furnished by the plant. This interesting power plant is eleven miles from the city and will supply Chattanooga and surrounding districts with 65,000 electric horsepower each day.

The District of Columbia is planning, provided Congress will make the necessary appropriation, to harness Great Falls on the Potomac River. The object is to give the city of Washington municipal control at reduced rates of its lighting facilities, and to increase the water supply. The maximum electrical energy of one hundred thousand horsepower can be generated by this dam on the Potomac. The estimated cost is fifteen million dollars. Such a dam, one hundred and fifteen feet high, will create a lake nine miles long. The proposed site is almos on the northwest boundary line of the District o Columbia.

The hotly contested Hetch Hetchy bill now i Congress proposes what may well be the greates of all projects of this character in this country The fact that an invasion of the Yosemite Nationa Park and the practical acquisition of control of th choicest portion of the park from a picturesqu point of view would result, if San Francisco were permitted to go forward with this undertaking, has raised serious antagonism to the plan.

All Californians are not in favor of the scheme The Tuolumne River and its tributary streams and lakes would have to be protected from defilement involving a system of policing and fencing on a large scale. The bill itself has already passed the House of Representatives granting the Tuolumne watershed to the city of San Francisco. Should the project go forward engineering construction on a scale that would dwarf many of our biggest dams will be begun. A beautiful valley in Yosemite Park will ultimately become a great lake, and the necessary buildings and other structures will of themselves occupy a considerable extent of territory. The progress of the Hetch Hetchy Bill through Congress will be watched with great interest by the entire country. The conservation of the nation's water resources by such means is one of the most marked developments of the century.

PANORAMIC VIEW OF CHATTANOOGA AND TENNESSEE DAM AND LAKE

WITH THE PRESIDENT AT MASS

From a Special Correspondent

YOUR correspondent stood at the main entrance of St. Patrick's Church in Washington on the morning of Thanksgiving Day, watching the arrival of the worshipers, to see whether Hon. Woodrow Wilson, the President of the United States, would follow the example of former President Taft in attending the much-advertised Pan-American Mass.

Promptly at eleven o'clock, one of the White House automobiles stopped at the curb, the President stepped out, and, accompanied by his secretary, Joseph P. Tumulty, and Dr. Cary M. Grayson, U.S.N., White House aide, and the President's physician, passed up the steps to the door of the church, where he was met by Monsignor W. T. Russell, the well-known pastor of St. Patrick's, and escorted to one of the front pews in the center aisle.

Very soon after the arrival of the President, the procession of the clergy, the chief figure in which was Cardinal Gibbons, entered the church. Preceded by a score of altar boys in scarlet and white vestments the cardinal, followed by four trainbearers, went inside the chancel rail and took his seat upon the throne prepared for him. President Wilson stood with the rest of the congregation while the procession passed up the center aisle.

Secretary Bryan and his family occupied a pew near the President, and other members of the cabinet, the chief justice of the Supreme Court and other justices, the members of the diplomatic corps from Latin-American countries, senators and representatives in Congress, and others prominent in the official life of Washington were among the audience. The church was elaborately decorated with American flags, intertwined with the flags of the Latin-American countries. Each one of the diplomats found at the entrance of the pew which he occupied the flag of the country represented by him. Immense American flags draped the pew in which President Wilson sat. The choir loft was decorated with a large American flag and a striking banner on which were the words "Pan-American Union."

There were fifty voices in the sanctuary choir, seventy voices in the mixed choir, and the organ music was augmented by an orchestra.

The profusion of altar lights, the gorgeous robe of Cardinal Gibbons sitting upon his red throne, the elaborate vestments of the celebrants of the mass, the brilliant colors worn by the attendants and the perfume of incense, all combined with the general decorations and the elaborate garments of ladies of rank in the audience to make that outward show in which the Roman Catholic Church seems to delight and to which its ritualistic form of worship so easily lends itself. The music, according to the official program, included sixteen items and was certainly entertaining to lovers of harmony, if not inspiring to the spiritually minded. The whole affair appealed to a Protestant more as a performance than as spiritual worship of God.

The sermon was delivered by Rev. Charles W. Currier, the newly appointed bishop of Matanzas, Cuba. It was a plea for peace and an arraignment of war. "Civilization is constructive; war is destructive." Civilization is the condition of persons living in an organized community with the object of mutual assistance in the acquisition of the good, the true, and the beautiful."

The full text of the mass, with the Latin and the English in parallel columns, was furnished to the more prominent attendants at the service, to enable them to follow more readily. Among the prayers after the sermon was this one:

"Deliver us, we beseech thee, O Lord, from all evils, past, present, and to come; and by the intercession of the blessed and glorious Mary ever Virgin, Mother of God, and of the holy apostles, Peter and Paul, and of Andrew and of all the saints, mercifully grant peace in our days."

In this prayer nothing is said about the intercession of the Son of God, our great High Priest, but merely human mediators are invoked.

President Wilson seemed very attentive to the order of service, apparently following the lead of Secretary Tumulty in the various attitudes assumed by the worshipers. Following the celebration of the mass a luncheon was given in the rectory of Monsignor Russell, to which some of the leading dignitaries of state had been invited. "The President was unable to attend." In responding to one of the toasts at the luncheon, Cardinal Gibbons made the following interesting statement:

"Critics have taken exception to this celebration on account of its quasi-official nature, expressing the belief that we aim at union of church and state. An old Scotchman said to another, 'Sandy, Sandy, honesty is the best policy. I know, because I have tried both.' The church has tried both union of church and state and the independent co-operation of church and state, and she knows the results of both."

Unusual interest has attached to the attendance of President Wilson upon the Pan-American mass this year for two reasons: First, because it is the first observance of this service under the new administration and many were watching to see whether President Wilson would follow the precedent set by former President Taft; and second, because resolutions had been adopted by the Protestant ministers of Washington and printed in many of the leading daily papers of the country, reciting that "every effort is made by the Roman hierarchy to give this Roman mass the color of an official function"; and that "the attendance of our chief magistrate and members of his cabinet not once, but year after year for three or four years, has been made use of to give color to the Roman claim that this service is now the official celebration of Thanksgiving Day in our national capital"; and declaring that "we desire to give voice to the widespread feeling of indignation among the millions of Protestants in America against the efforts of the Roman press and the Roman hierarchy to exploit the attendance of our chief magistrate and some of his cabinet . . . for the purpose of glorifying the Roman Catholic Church and giving this service official character, which it does not and cannot possess." In addition to this action on the part of the clergymen of Washington, various patriotic organizations have placed themselves on record as being opposed to the attendance of the President and his cabinet upon this function, and many citizens have written letters of protest to the President. Word has come from the White House that at least ten thousand such letters have been received there, and that three sacks full arrived in one day. In the face of all this protest, President Wilson decided to attend the mass.

Although Monsignor Russell attempted, in an interview in one of the Washington papers, to heap ridicule upon the Washington clergymen by exclaiming, when asked whether he thought the President would be influenced by the protest, "What! President Wilson! Is that automobile there impeded by a peanut?" and emphatically denied that the mass was an official celebration of Thanksgiving, yet Cardinal Gibbons in his speech at the luncheon referred to "its quasi-official nature." Furthermore, the Catholic Standard and Times Almanac for 1910 listed the first Pan-American mass as one of the notable events of the year, and stated that President Taft and his cabinet "were present in their official capacities." There can be no doubt that the Roman hierarchy interpret the attendance of the President and other high officials upon this function as a great triumph of Catholicism—a long step toward creating the impression that America is after all a Catholic country.

It is absolutely certain that President Wilson has deeply offended the Protestant sentiment of the nation. The undoubted right is conceded to the head of the nation to attend any religious service he may choose as a citizen, but when his presence is sought as a means of giving an "official character" to a Roman Catholic mass, and this is repeated year after year, there is a revolt against this as one of the means employed "to make America Catholic."

THE BREAD LINE'S SAVING POWER

"WELL, THIS PUTS HEART INTO A FELLOW"

ON THANKSGIVING DAY THE BOWERY MISSION DISTRIBUTES GENEROUS DINNERS IN BASKETS TO A LARGE NUMBER OF NEEDY AND DESERVING FAMILIES

ALMOST, NOT QUITE, TOO HEAVY TO CARRY HOME

STRANGERS watched with pitying eyes the homeless hundreds who doggedly held their places in the Bread Line on the opening night for the winter. Pity was in order, too true, but those who viewed this familiar spectacle from the vantage-point of the Bowery Mission's management saw rather another embryo regiment to be recruited into an army already numbering nearly twenty thousand saved men.

This will be the seventh winter of the Bread Line. Two hundred thousand breakfasts are served between one and three o'clock in the morning from Thanksgiving to Easter. How many of these are to the same men night after night cannot be known, nor how many of the tens of thousands of men who attend the mission are first reached through the Bread Line. But it is believed by the management that the majority of the 19,550 members of the Brotherhood first entered the door of the mission as homeless, penniless guests at this unique breakfast.

Each year's work at the Bowery Mission, as it is reviewed at this season, increasingly emphasizes the fact that God blesses the Bread Line in a signal manner. It is only necessary to walk along this tightly packed line of men, scan their clothing and their faces, watch them inside the building as they accept what to them is a feast, and then study the gathering of men in the nightly meetings in the Brotherhood room and the men who help in conducting these meetings from the platform—to appreciate by what a fine and thorough process thousands of social outcasts are being transformed into God-fearing and useful citizens.

For the big majority of the Brotherhood are warmly dressed, clean as to person, fairly secure as to employment, and professedly followers of Christ; many have regular incomes and good homes, and are out-and-out Christians of proved leadership ability; and most of them were once frequenters of the Bread Line, impervious to any other appeal than that made through their desperate hunger and destitution. To understand the imperative necessity of this work, then, one has only to reflect that, whereas many of the outcasts of the Bread Line go on in their downward path to the end, yet a sure percentage is redeemed through the years for God and society.

This is, unfortunately perhaps, a day of book-keeping in religion, and statistics are the test of efficiency. Any system of computation applied to the work of the Bowery Mission must take into consideration the appalling condition, mental, physical, and spiritual, of the men of the Bread Line; and it would be a clever system indeed that could then determine how much labor and how much money ought to be spent in transforming a single such life into an intelligent, self-possessed, effective leader of men and rescuer of souls.

At the Bowery Mission meetings the invitation is

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

Heralded by a marvelous light in the sky, which was seen by many, Jesus has come to Raymond, the scene of the story In His Steps. Popular excitement runs high, and extends throughout the country, skepticism being uppermost. Jasper Carter, editor of the Raymond Gazette, fails in an astonishing way to get either a sensational story or a photograph, as do also the other newspaper men, who come from other cities. Carter's star reporter, Barnes, accepts the reality of Jesus, and has a serious break with his employer. Jesus calls to see the editor, and leaves with him a remarkable manuscript. Jesus comforts Mrs. Page, whose little daughter dies, but does not bring the child back to life. He addresses an audience in First Church, an audience at the State university and again a great audience at the church. Virginia Page and Mr. Stanton, assistant to Mr. Maxwell, the pastor of First Church, have been strongly attracted to each other. In a riot of the crowd near the church Stanton protects Virginia from harm. Jesus appears on the church steps and quiets the mob. Some days later he leaves Raymond for the East. Virginia and Stanton announce their engagement. In the Gazette office Barnes and Carter are discussing the personality of Jesus when despatches arrive announcing the appearance of Jesus in New York and describing a remarkable conference he held with the clergy. Carter soon after leaves Raymond to attend the National Editorial Convention at New York. Virginia and Stanton are married, and go East for their wedding journey. After they have been in New York a week they find themselves in a dense crowd near the Subtreasury Building, and see Jesus standing beside the statue of Washington, holding in his arms a little girl who holds in her fingers a wreath of artificial flowers.

CHAPTER VIII

FOUR hours later Virginia and Stanton were in their room at the hotel. When they were seated, they looked at each other with glad but awe-struck faces.

"What an astonishing scene!" Virginia was saying in a low tone. "Now we can understand a little better the great crowds that thronged Him when he was here before."

"Yes, and what tremendous power he had over all the people! Did you notice the people while he was talking?"

"No. I was too much fascinated watching him and the little girl. It seemed to me we were standing at the very Judgment Day."

"Virginia, we were. It was a judgment day for New York, and for every other money-loving, material worshiping city. What he said and did must have burned into the heart and mind of every person there. Did you notice Jasper Carter?"

"No. Was he there?"

"Yes. And he bore the same look on his face we noticed the day of the mob. It was the look of a man who is afraid, and at the same time enraged, in the presence of a virtue and a sinlessness he cannot understand or beat down. I could not help thinking whenever I caught a glimpse of his face that the old Pharisees and Scribes must have been like him."

"I did not see him," murmured Virginia thoughtfully. "I was too much fascinated with Jesus. What a voice! What a message! What compassion and what stern indignation against selfishness and wrong!"

"Men's faces went white when he lifted up the child. Ah! It was a sight not to be seen twice in an age. It will stay with us always. I am eager to write the account of it to Mr. Maxwell."

"And I to Rachel. Shall we do that now while our hearts are full of it?"

"Ay. It will be good for them in Raymond to hear of it. Of course the papers will have accounts. But we know how they so often exaggerate and color."

"Richard, do you think any one could exaggerate that scene?"

"No. But of course I mean they could not grasp its full meaning. Neither can we. There were dozens of newspaper men there."

"Yes. Didn't you say there was an editorial convention here this week?"

"From all the States. This appearance of Jesus will be the event of their lives."

"And of ours, Richard. To think that he actually saw us and singled us out in the crowd and asked us to come to him where he is staying this evening!"

"Ay. I understand and feel exactly the same. Virginia, Jesus has hallowed our love, and it will go always with us. Did he not appear at the beginning of his ministry at the wedding feast? Did it not teach the world his deep and tender interest in human love?"

Both Virginia and her husband began their letters at the same time. Stanton wrote with great rapidity as his habit was, and threw his great-hearted enthusiasm into his vivid descriptions of that day's event.

[Letter from Rev. Richard Stanton, visiting in New York, to Rev. Henry Maxwell, Raymond, describing the wonderful appearance of Jesus in Wall Street and its effect on the city.]

"MY DEAR MR. MAXWELL: Jesus is here! At last he has appeared in public and begun what I believe will be a ministry of power such as this great and wicked and good city needs for its future.

"The papers and telegraph will of course give you details, but it was Virginia's and my good fortune to be at the scene in Wall Street to-day, and I must write out of the fulness of my heart as an eyewitness.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

A National Welfare Survey

THE greatest work yet undertaken by the National Civic Federation consists in an investigation by its department of social economics of our social and industrial progress during the last three decades, and an inquiry into the theories and proposals of Socialism. This comprehensive survey was authorized last summer, and plans for carrying it out were taken up at the fourteenth annual meeting of the Federation in New York, December 4 and 5. Problems of workmen's compensation occupied much of the discussions. It is estimated that 4,000,000 men and women in the United States now have the legal right to be compensated if injured in industry. Exposures in large cities of gross violations of pure food and drug laws also received the Federation's attention. The relation of the Sherman Act to co-operation between farmers; the benefit or otherwise to the public in price-cutting by big stores; mediation laws to assist in the settlement of labor troubles, these and kindred topics were treated under reports from the several departments, and measures of national interest advocated.

Woman's Day at the Capitol

THE great body of women now assembled in Washington for the forty-fifth annual national suffrage convention was greatly disappointed by the President's failure to refer to the question of equal suffrage in his message. Evidently the suggestion that the convention employ mental telepathy was not carried out. This week is characterized as one of the greatest landmarks in the history of the movement: besides important organization changes, particularly affecting the finances, and many addresses by distinguished leaders, the convention will endeavor to have the House of Representatives create a special committee on suffrage similar to the committee in the Senate, which suffragists would regard as of even greater importance than presidential mention. It is pointed out that one-fifth of the Senate, one-seventh of the House and one-sixth of the electoral vote now come from States in which women have the franchise. It is an interesting coincidence that the compatriots of Mrs. Pankhurst in expectation of attempts by the police to arrest her upon arrival from America are preparing a huge demonstration to prevent such an inglorious return to her country by force, if possible.

Late Floods in Texas

TORRENTIAL rains which began on Monday night, December 1, swelled three rivers and scores of small streams beyond their banks into a flood of serious proportions in central Texas. A territory two hundred miles in length and one hundred miles wide was affected. Fifteen thousand persons were driven from their homes and a vast amount of property was destroyed. Many lives were lost, the exact number not yet being known. Train service was demoralized.

Great Museum Proposed

AMONG the many projects for commemorating the passage of one hundred years of peace among English-speaking peoples is that of erecting a group of twenty buildings in New York City to be known as the Museum of the Peaceful Arts. The object of this stupendous memorial is to preserve to posterity the records of industrial, mechanical and scientific progress. The incorporators of the proposed museum include men of national standing. It is estimated that $30,000,000 will be required to erect the group, and between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 annually for maintenance.

Great Literary Find

ALL ENGLISH speaking races are interested in the finding of the Glenriddell manuscripts of the poet Robert Burns. The two bound volumes of this, the largest collection of Burns manuscripts in the world, recently disappeared, to the consternation of all persons interested in such treasures. After passing through two or three hands, they had reposed in the Liverpool Athenæum Library for sixty-four years, and then were sold, but to whom no one seemed to know. The literary public, especially of Scotland, was horrified. But now the two volumes have been produced by Mr. John Gribbel of Philadelphia, the mysterious purchaser, who announces his intention to present them to Scotland. The famous manuscripts consist of letters and poems selected by the poet and presented by him to his friend and patron, Robert Riddell of Glenriddell, Scotland. Now the question is, which Scottish city will receive the relic?

To Dissolve the Can Trust

THE Department of Justice on November 29 filed an action in the United States District Court to dissolve the American Can Company, one of the country's biggest corporations. This company was incorporated in New Jersey with a capital of $88,000,000, and soon, according to the government, controlled about one hundred formerly independent plants. The attorney general seeks to dissolve the alleged trust into units of different ownerships in order to restore competition.

An Official in Disappearing Role

SINCE October 16 Mr. Charles B. Stover, commissioner of parks until his prolonged absence made a new appointment necessary, has mystified his friends and all New York by refusing to give any account of his whereabouts. He has been found successively in a half dozen cities only in each instance to successfully lose himself a minute later. He has written a friend protesting about the hue and cry which is being made. Everybody is confident that Mr. Stover is safe, and will appear in good time; yet an undercurrent of anxiety is apparent in the press comments.

Two-Wife Indians Suppressed

THE small band of Navajo Indians in New Mexico, who fo two months conducted a miniature rebellion against th restrictions that permit them but one wife each, finally suc cumbed to the moral suasion of General Hugh L. Scott, and al but two surrendered to the government. The Indians had stolen three India women and committed other overt acts; and had even effected an armed en campment. For a time serious trouble was apprehended, and troops were ordered to be in readiness. The lawless band of fifteen was well supplied with rations and arms. They will be tried at Sante Fé.

A Call to Arms in Ulster

SERIOUS preparations were begun in the county of Ulster Ireland, early in December, to resist the enforcement of Home Rule. A circular purporting to emanate from the "British League for the Support of Ulster and the Union" was "confidentially" sent to selected persons with the object of enrolling "suitable men to assist the Loyalists of Ulster if necessary in their armed resistance to Home Rule." While actual warfare on this much-debated measure is not expected, tens of thousands of men are organized to oppose the law "at all hazards."

Bound to Nominate Pindell

PRESIDENT WILSON has renominated Henry M. Pindell of Peoria, Ill., for ambassador to Russia. Publication of alleged correspondence of Senator Lewis, which seemed to indicate a secret understanding between the President and Mr. Pindell that the latter should be an ambassador in name only, prevented his confirmation by the Senate in the extra session. It was intimated that by inaction Mr. Pindell was to delay the conclusion of a new treaty with Russia which would protect Hebrew citizens of this country. The correspondence was entirely repudiated and a former secretary arrested for forging the letters.

Fatal Lodging House Fire

FIRE sweeping through the Arcadia Hotel, Boston, a cheap men's lodging house, burned to death twenty-seven men and terribly injured many others. Many were negroes. The sleeping men were caught as in a trap, and many brave rescues were made by firemen. The circumstances are being investigated.

The White House Couple Sails

SATISFIED that they had gratified public curiosity long enough, Mr. and Mrs. Francis B. Sayre cleverly outwitted a throng of photographers from newspapers and moving-picture companies on Saturday morning, November 29, and reached their staterooms on the steamship George Washington unobserved. Even the ship's officers were unaware that the famous bridal couple were aboard until the President calmly joined them, hugely enjoying the joke himself. The Sayres are expected back from their honeymoon trip in January.

Sixty-third Congress Convenes

CONGRESS convened December 1 in its regular session, lasting until March 4, 1915 (with recesses). This is the first regular session of Congress in sixteen or eighteen years in which the Democratic party has been in control of all branches of the government. A program of exceptional importance awaits attention. Government ownership, living costs, naval equipment, labor conditions, currency measures, army enlargement and Philippine independence are among the subjects to be taken up.

HRIST FOR LIFE AND A LIFE FOR CHRIST*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

VEN a skilled superintendent or pastor with the whole session in his control can seldom go over so much ground satisfactorily and make one concentrated impression. But much may be done in week if the whole religious life of the church and the me is devoted to previous preparation for the review. is would be a good "forward movement" for every quar-, but especially so for the last week of the year, whose ssings should in any case be the theme of that week; d there is no more impressive time to spend a week in ntinued and united consideration, after the manner nd so effective in revivals, of the duty of childhood and uth especially, but of many others also, to choose Christ r life and a life for Christ. The objection that holiday tractions are numerous really adds a new reason for eoccupying with good things what is often a week of usual temptation to the young. As we are succeeding the nation-wide effort to crowd out the insane celebra-ns of the Fourth of July, let the churches and Sunday hools take courage and begin at once a united movement every town—in one church in each town at least—to epare a "safe and sane" and unselfish and happy Chris-an celebration of the "holidays," which many have for-tten means holy days! Why not one more "holy week" hich shall not be the less happy with sin crowded out?

Here is a suggested program which may be adopted by nday school superintendents with approval of teachers, d endorsed by pastors:

Sunday, December 21. For evening meeting or home ading, Verbal Prophecies of Christ in the Year's Lesson: en. 3: 15; 9: 27; 22: 18; 49: 10; Num. 24: 17; Deut. 3: 15.

Monday, December 22. Symbol Prophecies of Christ: en. 4: 4; Ex. 12; 40: 1-16.

Tuesday, December 23. Prophecies of Christ in Acted arables: Gen. 22: 1-14; Num. 21: 4-9.

Wednesday, December 24. Theophanic Glimpses of the ehovah-Jesus (Key, John 1: 18): Gen. 17; 18; 19; 32: 1-32; Ex. 33: 17-23; Josh. 3: 13-15.

Christmas Eve Song, 9.00 P.M. "Holy Night," first rendered on chimes, if any, then sung, starting at exactly the ame moment in all homes and meetings, with windows hrown open to send the message out in the streets as a call o Christ.

Thursday, December 25, Christmas Day, 6.00 A.M. All hurch bells ringing joyously a call to praise and prayer nd decision and consecration at home, or better in early ervices at the churches or schoolhouses near by. Where here are chimes they will surely play "Joy to the World, he Lord Is Come" and other familiar Christmas tunes.

Breakfast motto, repeated by all in unison: "God so oved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that vhosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3: 16.

Christmas grace at table, in unison:

> For these and all thy gifts of love,
> We give thee thanks and praise;
> Look down, O Father, from above,
> And bless us all our days;
> And help us show to all around
> The gladness of thy ways.

Christmas forenoon: trips to give flowers to the sick and food and kindly greetings to the poor, on a city-wide plan that will prevent doubling on some and missing others.

Christmas dinner grace:

> O Jesus, come to this our feast,
> As when of old you walked with men.
> Through every day be thou our guest,
> And conquer all that lures to sin.
> The reign of right bring quickly in.

Christmas Evening Festival. There is surely something better to be devised than the usual selfish Sunday school celebration of God's great gift of Christ by deceptive Santa Claus affairs in which getting sweets rather than giving joy to others is the dominant thought, even of prosperous children who get more candy than is good for them in their own homes. Sunday schools continue this substitution of Santa Claus for Christ and of getting rather than giving, it may be presumed, not because the inaptness of it is not seen, but because it has become a custom that a single school would fear to break lest it should lose members. But a group of churches in a town or county can by a campaign of education introduce a better way, with the glad approval of the boys and girls, who are naturally altruistic. The dominant notes in the recitations, songs, addresses and gifts of the Christmas festival should be:

1. God has given us Christ and countless other gifts.
2. Our first Christmas gift should be the gift of our hearts to him.
3. We should also give our goods and our lives for the benefit of mankind, especially the poor and sinful near us, and our farthest "neighbors" in mission fields.

Friday, December 26. Read (at home worship or elsewhere) Psalm 136: 10-26, David's review of Israel's history, using responsively the chorus, "For his mercy endureth forever." God's loving kindness in our own country's history and in the personal history of the year should be urged as a reason for choosing Christ for life and a life for Christ.

Saturday, December 27. Heb. 11: 23-31, New Testament review of Israel's history.

Sunday, December 28. Read Joshua 24, Joshua's review of Israel's history.

Morning sermon on "The Valley of Decision." Suggested text, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved and thy house," with reference to Joshua's word, 24: 15, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

Topic for young people's service or evening sermon, "Choosing a Life Work," with some reference to Moses' choice. Heb. 11: 23.

Sunday school lesson on "Choosing Christ for Life and a Life for Christ."

This is at once Review Day, Decision Day and Vocation Day—a time to review the lessons of the quarter and the blessings of the year only so far as they will influence those who have not chosen Christ for life to do so, and those who are Christians who have not chosen some vocation which would be a life for Christ and for the good of others to choose such a life work to-day.

Surely there is enough in the history of the one year just closing to constrain any reasonable and rightminded person to climb out of the valley of decision, where many in our Sunday schools who belong to the families of God's own people to-day have lingered long—some as long as the Israelites lingered in the wilderness with the land of blessing close at hand, intending to enter it surely some time, but deterred by fears about difficulties that God would have helped them to conquer. For thousands of Israel it was too late and they died outside. Shall it be so for any of us?

Imagine three cards, with a place for a signature. See which, if any of them, you will sign on this "Decision Day," when we may decide wrongly or rightly as we choose, for God has given us a share of his own freedom of the will. Even God cannot make us good against our wills, nor even without the specific consent of our wills.

Think of such a card as this: "I cannot love and serve Jesus Christ. Signed ————." No intelligent person could sign that and so declare that what God commands all to do some cannot do.

Here is another card: "I will never love and serve Jesus Christ. Signed ————." Probably no one in all the Sunday schools of the world would sit down alone and deliberately sign that he is more ready to say "Never" than to say "Now."

Then here is the card that every one who believes there is a God above this wonderful world and that he sent his Son to this world to save and guide us, should sign without any more cowardly delays:

> I will now and forever love and serve Jesus Christ, and help him save others, and I will not choose any vocation in life which Christ would not approve and which would injure my influence for good.
> (Signed) .....

That brings us to speak of this as "Vocation Day." Secretary Cochran of the Presbyterian Board of Education at Philadelphia suggested such a day a year or so ago for Presbyterian Sunday schools, and this good idea has been officially appropriated by the Southern Methodist Church, which has put it into its denominational Sunday school calendar. On the last Sunday in September all the million Sunday school children of that connection were told how they are bound to choose for their livelihood in the world only such occupations as are fit to serve God in, and that God will hold them each responsible for making the right kind of choice. Of course, there will be a good deal said about the ministry and missionary service as preeminently appealing. There is no better time for Vocation Day than the last Sunday of the year, when new resolutions are in order.

* THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for Sunday, December 28, 1913. Quarterly Review. GOLDEN TEXT: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3: 16.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—I LIVE in a country place which is growing. I have been the secretary and primary class teacher. We are soon to have a district Sunday school conference, and I am asked to write a paper which is not expected to be elaborate but practical. What can I say?—E. L. M.

Say that it is the duty of everybody in the community, young and old, to come into the Sunday school for Bible study. Advise workers to organize a home department for those who cannot come regularly. Appoint visitors to distribute Sunday school materials. Urge these members to visit the Sunday school at least once a quarter. Have an interesting evening of music, recitations, and occasionally stereopticon or moving pictures, the expense to be made up by subscription after the first entertainment has been given. Until good teachers can be found, let the school be taught in three departments—the primary class, the young people's class, and adults' class. Plan to make the Sunday school the center of interest in your town.

—RECENTLY OUR PASTOR and I were discussing the Sunday school teacher. I maintained that good teachers have different talents; some are more suited to teach small children than others. He took the position that any one who could not adapt himself to any class from the adult down to the beginners was no teacher at all. Who was right?—J. F. M., Kittanning, Pa.

You were right. Some persons make good teachers of children, and others make good teachers of larger folks. It is not a question of adaptation, but of natural qualities. Tell your pastor to describe what a kindergarten teacher would do with a class of young men from sixteen to eighteen years of age.

—KINDLY SUGGEST names for adult classes.—Mrs. C. U., North Manchester, Ind.

always given for men to declare their intention to live better lives. When a man so declares with apparent sincerity, he is given a Bowery Mission Brotherhood card, to which is attached a pledge to live a good, true, clean, honest, and sober life, and to abstain from alcoholic drinks by the help of God, coupled with a request to be enrolled as a member of the Brotherhood. This card must be kept at least twenty-four hours before the signed pledge will be accepted by the mission; and often the card is kept under consideration for days, and then signed and handed in. Just under 37,000 such cards have been taken by men moved to better lives, and 19,550 have been signed and returned. And out of these stupendous totals, thousands have proven the reality of their faith, and hundreds more have risen to places of great usefulness in the service of Christ. Never forget that in most cases these were men practically abandoned by society and by themselves.

Mild weather, blessed boon as it is to the very poor, does not in itself provide unemployed and homeless men with clothing, food and shelter, nor with jobs. It is practically as exhausting to tramp the streets in search of work in one kind of weather as in another. Hunger will drive a man to crime on a balmy midnight as well as when wintry blasts add to his misery. And so the opening of the Bread Line at the Bowery Mission at one o'clock this Thanksgiving morning was welcomed by the long line of weary, battered men with all the fervor of former years.

Nearly two thousand men of exactly the same types as have always composed the Bread Line accepted the Mission's heartening breakfast. There were the same aged, trembling, worn-out figures; the same husky toughs; the same staring faces of men for the first time down and out in the battle of life; the same slouching dope fiends; the same drunks; the same evil countenances; the same drawn and hopeless faces that told of better natures struggling within against the downward drag of circumstances. The line has been faithfully in its place waiting for the opening of the doors at one o'clock every morning since. The same men are not always in the line, but the line is always the same; and out of this changing crowd of the scum of New York God is sifting his own.

The Bowery Mission is doing God's work in the process. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who pray for and contribute to the mission are coworkers with it and with God, and the value of the work cannot be estimated by any computation.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By no means all are ready in their teens to choose a life work finally. Many must take not what they would but what they can. Often neither teache nor parent nor pastor can tell to what work a youth is best adapted, nor can the youth himself. A striking instance of one who did not find the work for which God manifestly intended him till he was a grown man was the case of a workman digging in Central Park, New York, who pausing with his shovel in hand in front of the wolf den of the zoological garden saw a sculptor copying a wolf in wax. A thrill went through the workman, and he exclaimed, "I could do that." The sculptor turned and seeing the soiled workman hardly knew whether to be amused or provoked. "Give me a bit of that wax," said the awakened workman. The sculptor, perhaps thinking him a madman that it was safest to humor, gave him a bunch of the wax. That night the workman sat up alone in his room and with eager hands molded a wolf from memory with mouth open. The one he had seen had the mouth closed. In the morning he brought his work to his family, a wife and several children, as they sat about the breakfast table, and to test his work he said: "Now, when I uncover this, everybody say quickly without waiting for anybody, what you think it is." He pulled away the handkerchief, and everybody, in surprised wonder, exclaimed: "It's a wolf!" That was encouraging, but he would not be sure he was called to a new vocation till he had made another test, and so he went again that day to his shoveling in the park. That night he molded another statue, and uncovering it at the table, all cried: "Why, it's Gyp!" Gyp was the family dog. "And so," said Edward Kynniss, the famous sculptor, afterward in telling the story, "I knew I had struck the trail." He had found at last in the third decade of life what God intended him to be and do.

By no means all who think they are called to be artists prove it by their work. It is often an intended kindness but it is never a real one when a youth is encouraged to enter some "profession" in which he is sure to fail, when he should be frankly advised to enter some "trade," mechanical or mercantile, in which he may expect the joy of success.

If to live unselfishly is the ultimate beauty, then there is a chance for everybody to be a great artist. What would you not give and do, by way of expense, by way of sacrifice and by way of labor, in order to learn the skill of putting on canvas in one exquisite painting the soul of all your longing for beauty? Are you not then willing to spend as much in labor, sacrifice and outlay, especially in the patience of endless practice, to achieve the secret of living an exquisite life? Just to put yourself heart and soul into some service done wholly for others and not at all for yourself in your own home, in your town, in some foreign land, wherever God calls us, is the way whereby any day you may "start to art school."

"JESUS IS HERE!"

Jesus appeared suddenly on the os of the Subtreasury Building in ll Street at noon to-day.
Virginia and I had been in Trinity urch enjoying the quiet and the ying of the organ by an old man, o was rendering Guilmant's 'Even-Devotional.' When we came out started to walk through Wall eet, but had not gone half a block en the street seemed to fill right up h men.
'We could hear the cry on every e, 'Jesus is here!' The crowds t poured out of the offices were all ts, but New York money was repented in men who are worth their ndreds of millions, or who at least ntrol those fabulous amounts. I nk I have never seen a similar wd of men anywhere. Virginia d a sprinkling of woman clerks and nographers were conspicuous in nparison.
"Now, to understand what follows, suppose you ought to feel, as Vir-nia and I did, the exact situation.
ere we stood at the center of what s been rated as the money heart of e greatest city of this republic.
ings have been done by men in this storic street that have ruined other en, deals made in staggering sums wealth, where not one stroke of nest labor was involved, by which en have made or lost fortunes.
en on the prairies of Kansas and in e factories of New England have d their entire personal histories aped and their lives beggared by e transactions of men whose very mes they have not known, who ve met in brokers' offices in this reet and transacted so-called busiss affairs, the object of which has en to secure vast fortunes for them-lves entirely regardless of what dis-ter might fall on others. Here in is narrow street for years men ave gambled for money. The great od worshiped here in this street is foney. Wall Street has been a syno-ym all over the country for speculaon, and deals, and control, and nancial jugglery, and greed, and oney-getting without any equivant being paid in the way of honest abor.
"All this, of course, you know more r less, as every American citizen nows in a more or less exact fashion, ut I doubt if any one could feel it as e did to-day, standing right there in he very presence of it. The very ord 'money' seemed to cry out in ur ears from the building, and the nen, and the very statue of Washingon himself, seemed to possess some nscrutable knowledge of the many elfish plans and money - loving chemes of this street in which that nass of men stood, all facing with harp intentness the Figure up there y the statue, holding the little girl in is arms.
"How had he come there? Where ad he been in New York all this time luring the weeks that had elapsed since his first appearance at the Minsters' Conference? No one could answer. All any one seemed to know was hat he had appeared at the noon hour holding the little girl in his arms, standing there by the statue, calm, silent, stern, waiting for the hearing that he seemed to expect would be his, without any previous announcement, with no herald to go before, with no other irresistible attraction except his own personality.
"And like magic the street swarmed with men. Before Virginia and I could reach the foot of the steps leading up past the statue, the entire space had almost been covered. We managed to get up on the second step and there we were hemmed in by the silent crowd.
"After he began to speak, absolute silence prevailed.
"The little girl looked like an Italian.
She had one hand on Jesus' shoulder, the other was holding a little wreath of forget-me-nots such as are frequently seen in the ten-cent stores.
"When Jesus began to speak, he instantly commanded attention by his quiet but amazing knowledge of the most intricate transactions on the Street. I saw man after man glance at his neighbor with stupefied wonder as Jesus in a few short, clear sentences revealed the very inner dealing of the speculative heart of America.
"And then before any one could tell where the transition had taken place, he was talking about the little girl and her artificial flowers.
" 'These flowers,' he said, 'were made in a tenement room,' and he named the street where the tenement stood, and then gave the owner's name. The little girl by working all day could make 540 of these flowers, for which she was paid five cents. A list of figures, quietly given, as to the profit made by the dealers in these flowers, followed.
"And then the whole figure of the Man seemed to undergo a marvelous change. He grew suddenly taller and larger. His voice rang out over that mass of money-getters like a trumpet of God. It seemed to me as I listened that he was speaking to all New York.
And he was. The men around him, their faces blanched with fear and self-condemnation, represented money worshiping New York in its entirety.
The little girl whom he passionately held up high for them to gaze upon represented humanity, worth more in her little self than all the money in the city, worth more than the city itself, worth more than the entire world.
And yet she was being exploited in order that men who already had millions might grasp millions more. She represented the greed which lay like a canker at the heart of a country's financial scheme, which trampled on worn-out women and defenseless children to keep up its luxuries and indulge in its selfish habits regardless of the precious humanity it trod into the grave.

"That voice of Jesus! How tender, and how stern! Tender to sinful women and little children! Stern to Scribes and Pharisees and hypocrites, no matter in what age of the world they live! I could not help thinking, as I listened to its fascinating strength, of other times when in Palestine he must have astonished wonderful mixed audiences of Roman soldiers, Greek philosophers, Jews, Asiatics, Africans, traveling merchants from various lands—the miscellaneous horde of all languages and pursuits that gathered in Jerusalem, who must on more than one great occasion have fallen under the indescribable charm of his words.

"What a picture I could have secured there if I had been capable of placing that scene on canvas! I do not know how long he spoke, and could not give his language in all its detail. I saw one newspaper man begin to take notes, and then he stopped; his eyes gazed at the Speaker; he resumed his note-taking and stopped again. And then, as if completely under the spell of the Voice, he simply listened—like all the rest, his professional duty as a reporter swept aside in the presence of such a tremendous tide of righteous wrath, that even I myself, innocent as I was of all the injustice he was rebuking, crouched and cowered as if I had been guilty.

"I do not know how long he spoke. Somehow, as we learned during that blessed week at Raymond, time, when one is with him, goes by unreckoned.

But when he paused, a silence brooded over that crowd so deep and painful that it was almost with a throb of relief that a cry was heard, a human cry that rose over the heads of the multitude like a lost soul's last wail of remorse, a cry so full of anguish and repentance that even while it broke the silence that was unbearable, it added another and different note of strangeness to all the astounding scene, and men's hearts stopped and then throbbed fast again as a man, holding his arms high up, was seen struggling to get nearer him.

"And the cry that rang from his lips was spoken with deepest passion. 'God be merciful to me a sinner! God be merciful to me a sinner!'

"The crowd gave way for him. And he struggled up until he reached Jesus' feet. He fell down on the steps then, and we could see Jesus stoop and raise him.

"Then a man near us, who had been with us when he entered the street, spoke out, but under his breath:

"'What! Clay Ross!'

"'Who?' I asked.

"'Clay Ross. Of the Westgate Securities Company.'

"Another man spoke. 'He's the real purchasing agent and owner of this child-labor material. What's that? He can't be—'

"Numbers of voices were raised. The deep spell of the Master's appeal was broken. I found myself looking at Virginia as if I had been somewhere else and had suddenly come back. Virginia was looking at me in the same way.

"Men began to move. No one had stirred a finger all that time. We could see Jesus talking with the man who had cried out.

"And then he began to descend the steps, still holding the child, and with one arm over the shoulder of the man who came along beside him, his eyes lowered, his whole bearing like that of one who has met with a mighty experience. And no man might interpret his look.

An Epoch-making Address

New York Sun, December 3

THE short speech to the legislators, which we have before us this morning, is simple, direct, intelligible and beautifully dressed in English that could not be improved. All honor, we say, to the Hon. Woodrow Wilson for this glorious achievement of courage and common sense!

A Message of Clear Purposes and Firm Principles

New York World, December 3

IF LANGUAGE means anything, it means that so far as the administration is concerned the United States will not recognize the constitutional authority of Latin-American governments established by usurpation without the free consent of the unintimidated inhabitants thereof. It is a bold doctrine and a radical doctrine.

In most conservative language, Mr. Wilson has delivered a radical address to Congress, with the promise of further radical recommendations yet to come. But all of it is the radicalism of a highly matured and well ordered mind, with clear purposes and firm basic principles.

Commended by the Foreign Press

The London Morning Post (December 3) pays a generous tribute to President Wilson's originality, strength of mind, and high principles. It adds: "If President Wilson maintains his attitude of championing constitutional government, the United States will be bound sooner or later to intervene in all Central American republics. This would be very much like a policy of protectorates."

The London Standard (December 3) says: "There are no grounds for questioning the accuracy of President Wilson's calculations or for not hoping that his forecast will eventually be justified."

The London Daily Mail (December 3) says: "The policy of watchful waiting has disarmed those critics who had sought to attribute predatory aims to the Washington Government."

The London Daily News (December 3) says: "Seldom has a presidential message contained so many bold and original ideas. The championship of constitutional government is a new form of the Monroe Doctrine which may involve practical difficulties, but is nevertheless preferable to Roosevelt's 'big stick,' which chastised without teaching and led to imperialistic adventures."

THE SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

THE Spirit of Christmas stood sadly on the street corner. Of course, the corner was cold, and the wind was bitter, but spirits don't usually mind such minor details—in fact, they revel in disagreeable weather. Still, the Christmas Spirit wept, and would not be comforted.

A woman hurried past with short, mincing steps, head held high, neck fur-covered, hands thrust into a deep, orchid-decorated muff. Behind her, on a shining chain, a tiny dog trotted, blanketed, perfumed, self-satisfied. On the curb stood two little children, pinched and wan with hunger and cold.

Quickly the Spirit of Christmas stepped up to the woman. Tear-drops stood in his eyes and his voice held the wail of the wind in it.

"Stop!" he told her, and his frosty hand rested on her sleeve. "It's the week before Christmas—the Lord's birthday. You have everything that money can buy, and these children have nothing—nothing at all."

Steadily the woman walked on. Perhaps her head was held too high to meet the tear-filled eyes. Perhaps she thought that she was buffeting against the wind instead of a pleading hand.

The Spirit of Christmas glanced at the children. They looked steadily, if vacantly, back. They did not even see him. Blindly he turned away from the icy corner.

Wandering around on a winter day is cold business, and so presently the Christmas Spirit walked through a crowded doorway into one of the large department stores.

"Here," he thought, "I shall be at home." For counters were decked with holly and the massive arches flaunted knots of red ribbon. Quickly he moved near the counter and spoke to one of the clerks, a slender girl, who was vainly trying to wait on six people at once.

"Look at me," he whispered, and his tear-stained face brightened up a bit. "Look at me and listen to my words. I am the spirit of joy, of light, of Christmas!"

Blindly the girl raised her tired eyes and brushed a thin hand across her white lips.

"It's cold here," she confided to the woman at her side. "I felt a wind just now. And I'm tired and sick at heart."

With a stifled cry the Spirit of Christmas turned and went past the angry, impatient crowd; past the flaming bows of ribbon and the cheerful holly; past the swinging, gaily colored doors into the street.

And there, alone in the gathering darkness, he gave way to an agony of disappointment and sorrow, until at last he was weary and exhausted with his grief. After a time he gathered his robe more tightly about him and walked away in the direction of the mansions uptown.

The house he stopped in front of was an imposing structure of white stone and brick. Golden lights streamed from a score of windows and the glow of an open fire wavered on the velvet curtains. Slowly the Spirit of Christmas climbed the steps with weary feet, and passed through the tightly bolted door.

He found himself in a wonderfully furnished room, filled with rich paintings and costly hangings. A beautiful woman sat in front of the fireplace and a man stood by her side looking down at her. She was speaking:

"The children," she told him, "must have everything that they want. And they want everything."

Hurriedly the Spirit of Christmas thrust himself in front of her.

"Of course," he spoke as though to the woman, "they must have what they want. Candy, perhaps, and a doll or two—" But the woman was still speaking.

"I need at least two thousand dollars," she told the man.

"Then the charities must go!" The man's voice was firm. "We can't afford both this year."

Wearily the woman shrugged her beautiful shoulders.

"Bother the charities!" she murmured. "Helen must have ermine furs and Reginald wants—oh, ever so many things."

With a little shudder the Spirit of Christmas slipped from the room.

It was dark; black, dull, impenetrable darkness, and the Spirit of Christmas walked on and on, now slowly, now fast. And he talked to himself as he went his way.

"No one knows me," he soliloquized sadly. "No one cares! Is there a Christmas? Or has every one forgotten?"

He was in a poor part of the town now—a part of town that was dingy, and not very clean, and badly lighted. Tenements lined the sidewalks. He stepped into the meanest one, and crept up many flights of stairs to a barren little room under the eaves.

The place was very neat, even if it was bare. There was a small table with a candle, a mattress of hay, and a rickety chair with an old woman sitting in it. She was small and white-haired, and her eyes were dim with age; but her cold fingers were deftly fashioning a tiny mitten.

The Spirit of Christmas stepped up to her, the tears coursing down his face.

"It's the week before Christmas," he said sadly. "I am the Spirit of Joy and Light."

Happily the woman raised her head.

"I know it," she told him. "I knew that you'd come. You always do about this time of year. I can't celebrate much, but, praise God, I can make mittens for the children. I'm glad you've come."

Quickly the Spirit of Christmas smiled, and as the radiance crept over his face, the tear-drops vanished.

Far off in the eastern sky appeared a tiny spot of light. It was the promise of a star.

DR. SUN'S ANSWERED PRAYER

JUST now that the question of a state religion for China is having a world-wide discussion, the following incident in the life of the great leader, Dr. Sun Yat Sen, is intensely interesting. This Eastern convert to Christianity gives a clear testimony to the power of prayer, when offered to the Christian's God.

"It is a story of his experience when the Chinese embassy to Great Britain secretly arrested him in his room in the British capital and had all plans laid to carry him gagged to an Oriental steamer by which he was to be shipped off to China. Of course Dr. Sun knew what fate would await him on his arrival in his native land and realized that his whole hope of serving his nation lay in escaping his predicament before he was carried off from English soil. In the tense and exciting story which he tells of that experience the noteworthy factor is his feeling description of his resort to prayer. He says: 'My despair was complete, and only by prayer to God could I gain any comfort. Still the dreary days and still more dreary nights wore on; and but for the comfort afforded me by prayer, I believe I should have gone mad.' After a few days, though still without prospect of release, he says: 'There came over me a feeling of calmness, of hopefulness and confidence that assured me my prayer was heard.' This hope was shortly afterwards justified by the receipt of a note which an English friend managed to smuggle into Sun's place of imprisonment in a bucket of coal. This assured the Chinese patriot that the British Government had taken up his case, and that he would be free in a few days. Sun records the receipt of this comforting message with the devout remark: 'Then I knew God had answered my prayer.'"

"A LOSS SO LARGE"

THE world is such a different place
When mothers die!
We miss the dear, familiar face,
The love-lit eye,
The heart that never showed a trace
Of enmity.

Our little helpless baby ways
Were mother's pride;
In all our childhood's griefs and plays
She was our guide;
Her sympathy in "grown-up" days
Was deep and wide.

Though there are others in our lives
Still with us here,
Brothers or sisters, husbands, wives,
Or children dear,
Yet when in heaven she arrives,
On earth it's drear.

There's nothing ever can efface
Her memory.
She's resting now in God's embrace
Beyond the sky.
The world is such a lonesome place
When mothers die!

Duplex RICHMOND TESTED D E TRADEMARK

The Offer Still Holds Good

For about a year we published the following offer on the back cover of "Men and Missions:"

That if any church which adopted our Duplex Envelope System, preceded by a thorough Every-Member Canvass (as outlined in the booklet of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, No. 1 Madison Avenue, New York) did not receive an increase in offerings to Missions, without any decrease in offerings for Church Support—

We would supply, without charge, envelopes for the next year—Single or Duplex.

In more than a year and a half there has been one single church to report that no increase followed the adoption of the Duplex System, although a thorough Every-Member Canvass was made. The pastor told us when he wrote to take advantage of our offer, that he was anxious to try again because he felt sure a second attempt would result differently. Apparently he was right. When the free supply was exhausted, the church placed its order for the third year.

The offer still holds good.

The Duplex Envelope System for the Church and the Robert Raikes Duplex for the Sunday School are both fully explained in "DUPLEX CHURCH AND SUNDAY SCHOOL METHODS"—64 pages, illustrated. Write for a copy and for free DUPLEX UNIT No. 12.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Forgetting and Remembering*

YOU have heard of strange experiences of sickness or accident making people forget much or all of their past. Sometimes one is tempted to wish he could forget the past, if it has been full of sorrow or sin.

The business of forgetting or remembering is at times most annoying. We remember what we want to forget and forget what we want to remember.

But to a large extent we can control our memory. We can ignore things that we wish to forget and make them grow more indistinct, while by association, exercise, use of will power, we can retain in memory much of the past for future use.

There may be some things in the past which we ought not to allow ourselves to forget until we have done something more about them. Have we, as far as possible, paid up the old debts, righted the old wrongs? Jesus spoke very plainly about this matter: "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift."

Among the other things to forget are your sins, your failures, your mistakes. The past usually clings about us too much. We are apt to think that because we failed in a certain thing a week, a month, or a year ago, we shall fail again. As long as we think so it will be apt to be so. But if we will compel ourselves to forget the past, to look up to God's power and forward to his deliverance, we shall find him ready to give us a strength undreamed of and to augment our skill and judgment with his infinite wisdom.

Things to be remembered? We must remember the time God called us; the time he saved us; the times he has helped us; the times he has given us indications of the work he has for us to do. "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus."

For the World†

MISSIONARY meetings used to be considered somewhat dull. It was hard to arouse a definite, personal interest in this great task of winning the world to Christ. But the new note in missionary instruction and activity has changed this. Societies like the Missionary Education Movement and the Student Volunteer Movement have made the needy people of those distant lands seem very real and very near. The fresh books that have been written about such heroes as Dr. Paton, Dr. Livingstone, Dr. and Mrs. Judson have shown how full of romance is the work of the missionary. Present-day workers, like Dr. Grenfell and Dan Crawford, come back from their fields with tales as thrilling as any adventure stories ever written. The stereopticon has shown us the faces and the homes of these stranger-friends to whom we owe the Gospel.

There never was a time when people all over the world were so much interested in one another. Anything that is human is interesting. The church is thrilled at the thought of taking the light, the bread, the water of the Gospel to these dark, hungry, thirsty souls.

Along with the new interest in the heathen must come new love for Christ. The most successful missionaries are those who love him most. If we truly love him we shall find a way to help.

Baptist Charities*

BAPTISTS take just pride in their hospital work. The Missouri Baptist Sanitarium at St. Louis is regarded as a model in the South. This institution was founded by Dr. Wayfield, and is supported by the General Baptist Association of Missouri. The Baptist Sanitarium at Dallas, Texas, is one of the best equipped hospitals in the whole country. Among the other Southern hospitals doing excellent work and supported wholly or in part by Baptists those at Houston and San Antonio, Texas, have excited special attention.

Homes for children and the aged and for the sickly are closely allied to hospitals in their saving work, and usually expect medical supervision in a part of the management. Baptists support many such beautiful havens of rest to the weary, or protecting arms to the young, as the case may be. In Newark, N. J.; Cambridge, Mass.; Richmond, Va.; Dallas, Brooklyn, the national capital, New York, homes for aged are provided by Baptist charity. Chicago Baptists, with the help of those in nearby States, are erecting a new home in Maryland to be called the Aunt Lizzie Aiken Memorial Home.

Especially beautiful is the charity that seeks out the children of misfortune, and surrounds them with fostering, Christian care until they may face the duties of life either for themselves or as members of Christian households.

Baptists have established several children's homes and are conducting them with loyal zeal. The Buckner Orphans' Home in Dallas, Texas, cares for several hundred children. Dr. Buckner founded and conducts this home.

In proportion as the Church of Christ realizes its mission to minister practical help to earth's unfortunate, will it win confidence and respect. But more important, through such ministry the church and every individual Christian is reflecting the Master's own yearning love toward the helpless, and helping him to win them to himself.

Questions and Answers

Subscriber, West Balton, Vt. Is it wise for an evangelist to say to his congregation: "All who are ready to die, arise"? Many times when this question is asked the best and most conscientious keep their seats.

It may very possibly be that this particular form of putting the test of religious life to a congregation is not the best. Preachers and evangelists should use skill and tact in phrasing the question. But it seems perfectly legitimate to ask for an expression of faith; to ask those who are on the Lord's side to confess him publicly. There is a definite promise for those who will confess Christ before men, and no Christian ought to be ashamed to do so. The act of rising is in effect a testimony. It shows the unconverted that Christian people are in possession of an experience and hope which are real. It adds strength to the message of the evangelist and to his appeal to the unconverted to accept Christ. There is a decided psychological value in getting the Christians to rise first; it is easy to get people to make and acknowledge a decision by rising when a large number are already on their feet. A better way to put the question would be: "All who believe they are saved, arise"; or "All who have given themselves to Christ." At the same time do not let us judge those who do not rise in open meeting. We ever have timid ones among us, also those who are still too much overcome by the beautiful newness of their faith to fully realize its great possibilities and hence do not as yet possess the moral courage to proclaim their newly found joy to all the world.

L. R. F., Pleasant Point, Me. Seven is the number which symbolizes completeness. In the passage in Rev. 5: 6, the seven spirits are held by commentators to typify the perfect and continuous energy of the spirit-impelled labors of Christ's apostles and ministers throughout the world, which are to go on ceaselessly to the end, and that the eyes symbolize the divine care and providence over the church.

H. P., Ilion, N. Y. 1. Fortune telling, magic tricks and the like are out of place in the church building. 2. While it is quite true that we have a right to ask our heavenly Father for help in our trouble and relief in our distresses, we should not expect him to do for us what he has given us the power to do for ourselves. It has been well said that our extremity is God's opportunity; when we are at the end of our resources and every hope gone, then—if we have the faith—the help comes that we so sorely need. We are to use all the means placed at our command to accomplish our legitimate ends, and so long as these means are there, and we know how to use them, it is our duty to do it. Spurgeon at a meeting of his church trustees began sifting out a pile of letters. They were of all sorts—pleas for help, bills from tradesmen, etc., and the custom was to pray over them. Mr. Spurgeon picked out three letters—all appeals for assistance. "We wont trouble the Lord about these," he said. "I'll attend to them myself." So there are many things we should do for ourselves, asking his blessing on the doing. And in sickness, when the remedies are accessible, we should not hesitate to apply the means and invoke the divine blessing in making them effective. Luke, the "beloved physician," was thought none the less of by his brethren of the early church because he practiced the healing art.

C. S. S., Vernonia, Ore. Any one who, knowingly or inadvertently, has defrauded the government, can make restitution. In a matter so small as that which you mention, a good plan would be for the person to send an offering to the "Conscience Fund" of the Treasury Department, Washington, D. C., covering the amount involved with interest, which, in the course of forty years, would more than double the original sum. Then we would advise that she should not rest satisfied with this, but show her gratitude for a way being opened to her by making an offering to the Lord's work, or to the poor of her neighborhood.

W. B. H., Thomaston, Me., writes: "I note in your issue of October 28 that all vessels should be equipped with wireless. That is my idea exactly. I have been going to sea thirty years and over—master, mate and sailor—and I think I ought to know pretty well. Am in a freighter at present as mate, and I know this ship can sink almost any modern ship; strike her amidships or near her engine-room, as in the cases of the Florida and Republic and Farragut. Had this ship I am in struck the Semanoka (a modern ship) two feet farther aft, she would have sunk her. Again, are the lives of a freighter (with say forty souls on board) not just as dear to them as those on a passenger boat? With all the talk and investigations coming from the Titanic disaster, very little is mentioned of this important matter—wireless. Anything you can do to forward this matter will be appreciated by those in freight ships. Your paper has been in our family for many years, and I know it has done lots of good in other ways." We believe the day is near when not only seagoing vessels, but lake and river craft and trains will be equipped with the wireless. Why not? A few days ago a train in northern New York signaled the police of a distant city to have detectives ready to make an important arrest when the train arrived and it was done.

THE BABY'S SMILE

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

THERE, in a manger filled with hay,
A tiny Baby sleeping lay;
A smile was on his little face.
And, though it was a common place,
A throng had crowded up the space,
To worship and to pray.

The mother, pale and wan and weak,
In rapture far too great to speak,
Could see no conqueror, no king,
Only a tiny baby thing,
Who stilled his cries to hear her sing
In accent soft and meek.

And yet, behind the baby eyes
There dawned a soul to rule the skies.

The wise men hurried from afar,
The shepherds saw a gleaming bar
Of light. And in the midnight sky,
Above the mountain grim and high,
An angel whisper fluttered by:
"Follow the Star—the Star!"

Deep in a manger lay the child,
The winter night was cold and wild,
The cattle clamored in the shade,
The lambs were crouching where they played,
And yet the baby, unafraid,
Turned in his sleep, and smiled.

Oh, bitter years of pain and loss!
Behind the smile there stood a cross!

L. B. J., Arapahoe, Neb. Please give the pledge of the members of the Epworth League.

The pledge for active members is as follows: "I will earnestly seek for myself, and do what I can to help others attain, the highest New Testament standard of experience and life. I will abstain from all those forms of amusement forbidden by the discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and I will attend, so far as possible, the religious meetings of the chapter and the church and take some active part in them."

W. R. C., Potlatch, Idaho, writes: "In your issue of October 29 I notice an inquiry from 'B. S., Pleasant Hill, Ill.,' about locating water by 'water witching' with a forked stick. The name 'witching' is a misnomer, for there is no possibility of anything that could in any sense give it this name. The stick best for the work is witch hazel (hence its name), but sour apple-tree wood is nearly as good, and I have often seen it used with the same results as the other. A small forked limb, about eighteen inches in length, is selected, leaving about four inches below the fork, which is sharpened to a point. The operator turns his hands so that the palms are up, and grasps the ends of the forked stick, thumbs outward, and the stick pointing straight up. When the operator feels the stick beginning to twist, he marks the spot, and the distance from there to the place where the stick points straight down is the depth that you will have to dig to strike the water. Only those whose bodies are heavily charged with electricity by nature can operate the stick with any degree of success. My father, a minister, now eighty-two years old, has located water many times."

J. McFee, Granger, Minn. Paul was familiar with the learning of his age, and was a "master" in literary expression. He sat as a pupil "at the feet of Gamaliel," who was celebrated in the Talmudist writings as one of the seven teachers to whom the title "rabbin" was given. In II Cor. 12 (which contains the passage in question) Paul speaks of his vision when he was "caught up to the third heaven." In the Jewish teaching of the time, the first heaven was that of the clouds or the air; the second that of the stars and the sky, and the third the spiritual heaven, the seat of divine glory. The word "heavens" is used in the Bible in varying senses, which must be gathered from the context, the most familiar being the visible heavens, as distinguished from the earth and as a part of the whole creation. (See Gen. 1: 1.) Paul's "third heaven" was thus higher than the aerial or stellar world, and cognizable not by the eye, but by the mind alone. The word "world" is generally used in Scripture in the purely material sense to refer to the habitable earth and its people. The passages in Heb. 4: 3; 9: 26, 9: 5; 11: 7; 11: 38, etc., have this material significance. In John 14: 2, however, many interpreters recognize an implied recognition of other worlds, the whole universe being a "house of many mansions."

In response to a request in a recent issue for the words of a poem on "Sea Weed," a reader at Fort Seward, Alaska, sends the lines below:

"Call us not weeds. We are flowers of the sea,
For lovely and bright, and gay tinted are we,
And quite independent of sunshine and showers.
Then call us not weeds. We are ocean's gay flowers.

Not nursed like the plants of a summer parterre,
Where gales are but sighs of an evening air;
Our exquisite, fragile and delicate forms
Are nursed by the ocean, and rocked by the storms."

S. C. B., Lafayette, Ind. The "sleeping saints," mentioned in Matt. 27: 52, 53, are thought by some commentators to have been Old Testament believers who were quickened to resurrection life at the moment of their Lord's death, but lay in their graves until his resurrection, when they came forth. Another view holds that only the graves were opened by the convulsion at our Lord's death, and that the saints who slept in them were awakened to accompany him out of the tomb, he being the "first-fruits"; further, that their resurrection was not a mere physical revival, but a resurrection to life everlasting, and that they went to glory with their Lord. Many different theories have been advanced in explanation of this verse.

Miscellaneous

L. E. R., Viola, Del. Thanks for your informing letter, which shows that you are a careful student of the Scripture.

Mrs. D. A. M., Worcester, Mass. The passage you quote is not in the Bible in the identical form in which you give it, although it is so in substance. See Ps. 94: 12 and Heb. 12: 6.

J. F. L., Plainfield, N. J. The statement you quote is based on an ungenerous surmise, and is wholly incapable of proof. Any evangelist who attacks the churches in the manner you mention is very far out of his true latitude.

N. V. R., Pontiac, Mich. 1. All three persons named in your letter are professing Christians, denomination not known. 2. Money for Indian mission work may be sent through this paper or through the missionary board of your own church.

C. F., Spring City, Pa. The "fire" or "kindling" carried by Abraham (Gen. 22: 6) was probably a bunch of dry twigs or fagots, in a small brazier (such as is common in the East), and which could be lighted at the last stage of the journey.

Mrs. C. B. V., Rock Valley, Iowa. The basis of criticism of the Catholic Church is not its religion, however much we may differ with it in belief, because all religions are equally protected under our constitution and laws. It is, however, a legitimate matter for criticism when religion is dragged into politics and when its leaders proclaim their purpose of extending the power of their church through political means. In this republic, church and state are independent of each other and should forever remain so.

Knowledge, Elizabeth, N. J. The marriage laws differ in many States, and you could not proceed safely without the assistance of a lawyer. The Bible prohibitions against unlawful marriages are set forth in Lev. 18; Deut. 7; Joshua 23; Ezra 9; Neh. 13. The oldest custom recognized marriages within the limits of the family group; but as population grew and civilization advanced, certain degrees were forbidden. While marriage between cousins is not expressly forbidden in Scripture, it is generally understood to be regarded as unwise to form such unions, since they are apt to result in degenerate issue.

C. E. E., Mount Vision, N. Y. Genesis is "the book of beginnings." It opens with the creation of the world and the human race and later deals more particularly with the history of the Jewish people. It is, throughout all, a religious history, but it is only a part of the first five books, which, completed, form a whole. The first chapter of Genesis gives the moral rather than the physical narrative of the creation, and establishes the divine supremacy over all. It is not designed to be regarded as science or tradition, but as an inspired recital of the first great events in world history, from the inorganic creation to the appearance of man upon the earth.

CHRISTMAS SHOPPING CROWDS AT HERALD SQUARE, NEW YORK

IT IS NO PROBLEM TO GUESS WHAT THEY WILL BUY

MAKING CHRISTMAS MERRY

THERE is one holiday in this country that the immigrant is as familiar with as we, and that is Christmas. He comes from a sorry land indeed, and there are but few such, if he has not from childhood loved this day. But it is just possible that in adapting themselves to the American manner of observing the day, our brothers and sisters from foreign lands lose something of reverence for it. Yet they gain much in the spirit of fellowship and goodwill that, crowding out lower emotions, year by year breaks down barriers and acts perhaps more powerfully than any other one element of our national life in merging all these races in one great people.

For the days that immediately precede Christmas, the cosmopolitan population of New York City, swelled by thousands of suburbanites, struggles in one huge, good-natured, competitive crowd for possession of the sidewalks and the aisles of the stores. All previously formed resolutions to observe the day by little home-made tokens, all preconceived objections to our exaggerated celebration, are drowned out of almost every individual's consciousness by the volume of telepathic suggestion that leaps out of the heart of this multitude on Christmas shopping bent. It is a veritable furore at last that seizes every one, and with lists all prepared and purses as well lined as circumstances permit, they come: from every kind of home, from every situation in life, they mingle together in one jostling, hurrying, laughing crowd of strangers moved by one common purpose—to keep alive in the heart of the race the joy of the Christmas-tide.

It would be a thankless and an ungracious task to try to analyze the feelings and the motives that animate this one and that one in such a well-intentioned and happy throng, and Christmas Eve is no time for ungracious thoughts. On that night one may perhaps register an earnest resolution to inquire later if it is true that all the tears of Christmas are not tears of joy and that all the sacrifice is not the sacrifice of love, and to determine to do what one can to remedy in future Christmases such grievous flaws in what should be a perfect day for humanity, since it is a day for commemorating the perfect gift of perfect love. But it would not do to dampen the ardor and the wise enthusiasm of the givers of gifts and the doers of kindly deeds by speculating upon the wisdom of it all on Christmas Eve.

You may see what takes place in all the cities of America merely by watching the busiest section of sidewalk and the busiest store in your own town, for the miles of streets and avenues in our great cities are composed of just such spots multiplied by the thousand and set side by side. Street venders line the curbs, and one almost imagines that their gravely performing mechanical toys have each its own guardian angel, so miraculously do they escape the trampling of the multitude. Usually these angels are visible, though, in the guise of youngsters in an enraptured semi-circle, each tugging on an unwilling parent's hand. On the dullest day the corners are aflame with stands of brilliant Christmas cards which sell so cheaply that even the poorest, almost, may send at least one remembrance with a little thrill of Christmasy pride and joy that the giver of a set of furs might envy.

THE QUEEN OF TOY-LAND SEPARATED BY A STORE WINDOW FROM HER ADORING PEOPLE

The wide-paned store windows are gorgeous exhibitions before which rich and poor, but especially the poor, congregate to stare and admire. The aisles of the spacious department stores are simply packed with people, and in the lesser shops the overflow crowds and twists and reaches and struggles. Society in its familiar shopping-places elbows and joggles, too; and on the sidewalks, the surface cars, and in the subways and on the elevated trains, the shoppers hurry from place to place, empty-armed and eager-eyed in the morning, draggled and loaded with bundles in the evening. It is safe to say that if a bargain sale for the routine needs of the home should draw the same crowds together, there would be riot and bloodshed, for the spirit of selfish competition would be so rampant that no place would be left even between neighbors for kindliness; but such is the power of the Christmas spirit that this great army of invasion tramps in all directions through the streets and stores of New York for two weeks with an ever-increasing jollity and goodwill that no number of momentary annoyances can diminish.

In contemplating such a tremendous, almost unthinkable, amount of buying for Christmas, one may be allowed a deep sigh at the thought of the many, many homes which are still untouched, not by the Christmas spirit, but by the Christmas joy. And you may find such in your town as well as in New York. The telepathy that sets mothers and fathers and aunts and sisters in a rush of buying reaches also the childhood of the land, and without understanding why, little children who can never know the bliss of finding something in a Christmas stocking must still inevitably know the torment of wishing that some one would give them something this Christmas. And so real and natural is this Christmas custom of giving that one of the keenest pangs of a mother's heart is to

NEW TENDENCIES IN OLD INDIA

BY CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

INDIA with her 315,000,000, as large as Europe without Russia, and increasing at the rate of 250,000 per month, is slowly but certainly moving toward an era of self-government. Not that Great Britain is to leave India, but she is each year giving more and more of the politics into the hands of the native people. In the native States I find strong men being raised up as administrators, judges, and men of business, many of these men being trained in Europe or America. The maharajahs and rajahs themselves, notably those of the larger States, are beginning to exhibit a new pride and obligation in the advanced development of their feudatories. In two of the largest native States I found compulsory education inaugurated by popular vote, while some of the most modern plans for irrigation and industrial progress are now taking shape in such States as Mysore, Gwalior and Baroda.

Great Britain with 75,000 troops and 1,200 civil servants, is administering the affairs of these millions with a success that betokens equity and just dealing for Hindu and Mussulman alike. No one can live in India without appreciating the wonder of that British rule, the ensign of whose genius at colonizing floats over half of the people of Asia.

India, 92 per cent. agricultural in population, has vast and untouched resources industrially and commercially. India is now growing by leaps and bounds in such industries as wheat, cotton, jute, and coal. In a single generation the increase in the jute industry has been 500 per cent. and that in cotton 100 per cent. Indian commerce with Great Britain alone is worth more than eighty million pounds sterling ($400,000,000) annually. Australia carries on a yearly trade with India of £3,000,000, while throughout India one meets an ever-increasing number of Germans and Americans, working in this country, and successfully, too, in behalf of trade.

I visited cotton mills in southern India and Bombay, where, but for the color of the skin of the operatives, I might have imagined myself in the mills of Manchester or Fall River. Brahmans even, with their age-long antipathy to toil, are swinging into line with the new order. Industrial and technical schools are springing up in both British India and in the native States, there being at present 236 of such schools with 11,598 pupils. The new India with her forty thousand miles of railroad, carrying 350,000,000 passengers yearly, together with 65,000,000 tons of goods, with modern conveniences of telegraph, telephone, electricity, sanitation and irrigation, is emerging into a new epoch. Her hour of economic progress is striking. The West has left her no option but to exchange her conservatism and obscurantism for the progress and competition of Occidental enterprises.

Education, moreover, inaugurated over a half century ago by missionaries, and since given with a wonderful freeness and prodigality by the government, has been, with railroads, India's greatest boon in the way of enlarged vision.

A VICEREGAL PROCESSION IN BRITISH INDIA EMERGING FROM QUEEN'S GARDEN

The British Government's attitude to education is reflected in the following splendid paragraph from the king-emperor's address at Calcutta University on January 6, 1912:

"It is my wish that there may be spread over the land a network of schools and colleges, from which will go forth loyal, manly and useful citizens, able to hold their own in industries, in agriculture and all the vocations in life. And it is my wish, too, that the homes of my Indian subjects may be brightened and their labor sweetened by the spread of knowledge, with all that follows in its train, a higher level of thought, of comfort and of health. It is through education that my wish will be fulfilled, and the cause of education in India will ever be very close to my heart."

From 1901 to 1911 the total expenditure for education in India has been seven and one-fourth crores of rupees, about $72,500,000. During the last four years the number of students under instruction has increased from five and one-third to six and one-third millions.

The major part of Indian education is carried on in the English language, which is becoming the Esperanto of India. The feeling, however, is arising, and to my mind justly so, that there should be increased emphasis upon the vernacular. The government forbids any form of religious teaching in State institutions, and this fact presents to India one of her great problems: How is moral and religious education, so indispensable to the new India, to be associated with the influx of Western materialistic learning?

India's religious and social progress is also undergoing important re-shapement. Caste is loosening. Adherents of Hinduism are divided at present into three camps: the ceremonialists, or those who in orthodox faith adhere to the traditional rites of worship and sacrifice to the ancient gods; the reformists, who, holding to the main tenets of Hinduism, are breaking away from caste and idolatry; and the educated Hindus, whose views are being highly colored by influences from the West and whose religion, as far as any one can perceive, is often little more than a name.

Christianity is making considerable advance, adding not less than one million converts during the year just past, but these additions are almost entirely from the lowest Hindu society, which has little influence upon the educated communities. The Indian tendency seems to be to retain the main principles and forms of Hinduism, but to revivify them with the more generous and altruistic spirit of Western religion, as that spirit is evidenced in a more practical social responsibility. As one missionary teacher expressed it, the future of religion in India will be Christian in spirit, but with Hinduism and the Indian sacred books as the Old Testament.

know that on Christmas morning she must face the little, pinched, wistful face without one solitary thing to make the day different from all the dreary days that have gone before in the home of poverty.

It helps to reflect that these throngs of shoppers have not always their own circle of friends in mind only, but are planning Christmas surprises and joys for homes too lowly to provide their own. Such homes you may find in your own town, though perhaps not in such appalling depth of want and misery as in a great "factory town" like New York.

Nowhere is the feeble pulse of this tired-out portion of a community more distinctly felt than at the Bowery Mission. This year between seven and eight hundred families made application to the Bowery Mission for remembrance in its annual Christmas bounty. To 350 of the neediest of the families—and in every case careful investigation was made—a basket dinner sufficient for ten persons was given. This is, of course, equivalent to spreading a Christmas feast for 3,500 people. The baskets each contained a five-pound chicken, potatoes, turnips, onions; a pound of coffee and a half pound of tea; half pound of butter; sugar, evaporated milk, prunes; a bag of salt and a loaf of bread.

Is there not something wrong when a basket of food can seem like an unbelievable miracle to a family in Christian America? These dinner baskets will be given out at nine o'clock Christmas morning (of course the Bread Line Christmas breakfast first being served to 1,000 men at one o'clock), and a brief but cheerful service of song and prayer conducted in the Mission auditorium. After the service these 350 humble but rejoicing souls will scarcely reach their scattered homes quickly enough with the wondrous Christmas celebration given them in the name of Christ. Yet who can think of their joy without inexpressible sadness? Do not forget that man cannot live by bread alone, that human nature requires playthings and comfortable clothing and the things that lift the soul above the daily grind: of these things there were none.

In the afternoon the Mission management provides a concert for men. At seven P.M. the doors will open to admit the annual guests to the Mission's Christmas dinner. Two thousand hearty meals in boxes will be distributed, and while this is going on to the cheerful music of a phonograph downstairs, a Christmas service of song and testimony will proceed in the auditorium.

GOD'S GIFT TO THE WORLD

*A Sermon by Rev. W. MacNicholl, D.D.

TEXT: "We know that the Son of God is come." I John 5: 20

THERE are some things we know in part, and many things we know nothing about. We can have absolute knowledge of nothing. What we do not know would make a much larger volume than what we do know. Hence, conceit ill becomes any finite mind. We know that we exist. Our being is not a fancy; it is a fact. We know that our fellow creatures exist. We know the earth and stars move. We know there is electricity in the sea and oxygen in the air, and that the law of gravity, although invisible, is a tremendous force. We know a little of the history and present state of this planet. We know something about the Bible—its poetry, legislation, biography, philosophy, science and transforming power. We have a smattering of astronomy, botany, geology, chemistry, art, and yet how little do we know concerning these things!

"We also know that the Son of God is come"—that God has given us intellectual and spiritual understanding. We know that Jesus lives in our hearts and that because he lives in us he lives in heaven, and lived, and died, and rose again on earth, and we know that the Gospel of the Son of God is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. These facts are so deep in our consciousness that we never question them. There are other things we do not know. We do not know how God made matter out of nothing. We do not know how many worlds there are in space. We do not know how gravitation operates, nor how the mysterious principle of life multiplies the forms of its manifestations in the animal and vegetable kingdoms. We do not know how the wind blows, nor how the water freezes. We do not know what gives its loveliness of form to the lily, its depth of color to the violet, its fragrance to the rose. We do not know in what consists the venom of the adder any more than we can imitate the movements of the eagle. We do not know how God created the invisible atom, nor how he frescoed and painted the seashells with such exquisite skill. Our knowledge is scanty: our ignorance is stupendous. Surely, then, humility is a becoming virtue.

There is one glorious fact we know in common with the apostle John and the primitive Christians, namely, that the Son of God is come. We know he came into this world to redeem its fallen inhabitants in fulfilment of prophecy. We know he lived and worked miracles, and died on Calvary, and rose from the dead, and ascended into heaven, and ever appears there in the presence of the Father in our behalf. We know all this and believe it. Why? Because the proofs that all these things happen are positive and irrefutable. Therefore we are warranted in putting the strongest emphasis on the weighty sentence which forms the text: "We know that the Son of God is come." We might add: "We know we are in Him that is true"—that we are dwelling in Christ, and that Christ is dwelling in us, because we love. There could be no true love without God; and every one that loveth as he ought to love knoweth God and is born of God. Love is the cohesive power of human society and the crowning glory of the home above.

Every evangelical believer is a child of God, as every depraved human being is a child of the devil. The latter proposition is denied by many religious teachers to-day, but it is affirmed in the Book in unmistakable terms, and we prefer to believe the Word of God rather than modern speculations about the Word. Jesus said to the unbelieving Jews: "Ye are of your father the devil, and his works ye do." The apostle John speaks of two distinct classes of people—"the children of God" and "the children of the wicked one." All true believers are the sons and daughters of the God Almighty. These are an innumerable multitude.

Those who are made partakers of the divine nature and are living in obedience to the law of the Lord are the sons of God. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God." What an honor! How careful we should be to bring no reproach on the royal family of the universe. But it needs to be remembered that the Son of God stands in contrast to the sons of God. Jesus Christ is the Son of God in a pre-eminent sense, in a sense peculiar to himself. He is the Eternal Son, the one, only-begotten Son of the Father. Holy angels and blood-washed saints were created. They had a beginning. The Son of God was not created, and had no beginning. From everlasting to everlasting he is God. "Unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee? But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever." "And when he bringeth his first-begotten into the world he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him." They did adore him on the first Christmas morning when they swept over the hills of Bethlehem and sang, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

Who, then, is Jesus Christ? He is the Son of God by eternal generation. He is the second Person in the adorable Trinity. He is the Jehovah of the Old Testament, the Angel of the Covenant, the Creator of the worlds, the Redeemer of our fallen race, the Judge of men and angels. "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son, and hath given him authority to execute judgment also because he is the Son of man." He is "the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we have beheld his glory, the glory as of the only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." These statements from the Blessed Book shatter unbelief to fragments. If he was not God the Bible lies, and he was a stupendous impostor.

What are some of the evidences that the Son of God is come? First, the witness of the apostles. They were on the ground at the time. They were men of at least average intelligence. They could not be deceived on the matters concerning which they gave testimony. They were conscientious men, therefore they would not lie. They all bore testimony to the actual advent of the Son of God. The four evangelists record the fact of his incarnation. The whole college of apostles give an account of his miracles, his teaching, his sufferings, death, resurrection and ascension. They saw him. They heard him speak. They touched him. He plucked Peter out of the waves of the sea. They traveled and labored with him for three years. They witnessed his mighty works on sea and land. They were present when he fed the multitude with five loaves and two fishes. They saw him cleanse the lepers and raise the dead. They heard him pray. They saw him weep and suffer. They visited the empty tomb after his resurrection. They beheld his ascension, and all laid down their lives in corroboration of their testimony. These facts are sufficient to satisfy every intelligent and educated mind.

The second kind of evidence of the advent of our Lord may be found in the fulfilment in his life of the Messianic prophecies. The Messiah of the Old Testament is the Christ of the new. This should be clear to every honest student of the Word of God. The Angel of the Covenant that appeared to Jacob at Mahanaim, to Joshua at Jericho. and to the three Hebrew young men in Nebuchadnezzar's fiery furnace was Jesus the Son of God, who comes to every believer through the Holy Spirit in the furnace of affliction. Every item of the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah was fulfilled in the history of the blessed Lord. The glorious Conqueror, coming with dyed garments from Bozrah, traveling in the greatness of his strength, and mighty to save, is the Man of Nazareth, of Gethsemane, of the cross, and of the ascension, who intercepted Saul of Tarsus on his way to Damascus, who was manifested to Stephen before the council, and to John in the island of Patmos. The Messianic writings were unmistakably verified in Jesus Christ, and this is another convincing proof of the truth of the positive statement of the text, "We know that the Son of God is come."

No more conclusive evidence of the first advent can be furnished than the progress of Christianity. It encountered powerful and malignant opposition at the outset; but it triumphed over ancient Judaism with its elaborate ceremonialism, its beautiful symbolism, its scholarship, its prejudice, and its commercialism. It conquered heathen Rome with its great military power, its wealth, its brutal depravity, its slavery, and its diabolical machinery of persecution and destruction. It abolished paganism. It transformed Rome. It reversed the currents of history. It is permeating the whole world

THE CHRISTMAS MESSAGE

BY IDA L. REED

ACROSS the snowy fields once more
Rings out the chime
Of silvery bell-tones, o'er and o'er,
From clime to clime.
The blessed chorus rings and rings,
And happy voices raise
Once more to Christ, the King of kings,
The world-wide song of praise.

Once more the happy carols rise
So sweet and clear
It almost seems the glowing skies
Must bend to hear;
As sweeps the glad and joyful strain
Earth's vales and heights along,
"Peace, peace on earth, good will to men,"
The old sweet Christmas song.

THE CHRISTMAS CRIB

BY D. H. STEFFENS

In Bethlehem, in Jewry.
This blessed Babe was born.
And laid within a manger.
Upon this blessed morn;
To which his mother Mary,
Did nothing take in scorn.

IF WE may judge by their carols and waits, the one thing in the Christmas story which most impressed the common people was the fact that the Virgin's Son for want of a cradle was laid in a manger or crib. Luke's Gospel twice makes mention of it. "And she brought forth her firstborn Son, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes and laid him in a manger." And the angel said to the shepherds: "Ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger." These are the two tokens.

The King of all kings to this world being brought,
Small store of fine linen to wrap him was sought:
But when she had swaddled her young Son so sweet,
Within an ox manger she laid him to sleep.

Every child was wrapped in swaddling clothes. There was nothing so extraordinary about that. The astonishing thing was the manger bed and the implied meanness and poverty of the scene of His birth. That more than any other thing impressed the poor who had the Christmas story of the Gospel preached unto them. It is therefore not strange that the word crib, from the German krippe and the French crèche, should be used to designate both a manger and a child's bed.

But men not only sang of the manger bed or crib in their Christmas carols; they actually reproduced and used it in their Christmas worship. This is the origin of the Christmas crib or praesepium; and let us add, of the Christmas garden, which some people consider of even greater importance than the Christmas tree. There is, however, nothing of Christmas in many of these gardens. The ingenuity once expended on carving a representation of the stable at Bethlehem with the Mother and Child, the shepherds and their flocks, the wise men and their gifts, is now directed toward the construction and arrangement of a modern landscape with trolley lines, mine dumps, fire engine houses and railway stations. Prosaic utilitarianism has supplanted the poetic naïveté of simpler days. The desire of simple hearts to see the incidents of the nativity in all their affecting detail has given way to a craving for senseless amusement at the sight of elaborately constructed mechanical toys revolving around a Christmas tree—justifiable only because it brings a bit of our out-of-doors into the house to keep the tree company. Let us have the landscape, but let it be an object lesson for our children, teaching them the import of the tree and the glad tidings of Christmas.

THE CHRISTMAS CRIB

A beautiful specimen in the Bavarian National Museum at Munich of the carved stables of Bethlehem or Christmas cribs whose origin and use in a past age are described in this article.

The first beginnings of these Christmas cribs must be sought in the cave or grotto at Bethlehem, which has been accepted as the scene of the great Christmas event, and converted into the Chapel of the Nativity. Justin Martyr, as far back as the middle of the second century, speaks of the Saviour's birth as having taken place "in a certain cave very close to the village." Origen, in the opening of the third century, speaks of this cave as recognized even by the heathen as the crib or manger, which was to be seen in this place. In the fourth century the Empress Helena, the mother of Constantine, built a basilica over the sacred spot, which Hadrian had attempted to profane by the planting of a grove sacred to the worship of Adonis—a form of idolatry peculiarly abhorrent to the pure-minded Christians. St. Jerome made his home in a neighboring grotto, that he might be near the birthplace of his Lord. He too speaks of the crib of Bethlehem, and the enthusiasm with which the crowds of pious pilgrims who came to visit the church and chapel in increasing numbers saw the very place where Mary laid her Babe. So here we have a church with a chapel dedicated to the Nativity and in it a crib or manger. The devotional enthusiasm of ages has lined the grotto with marble, marked the exact spot of the nativity with a star, placed a marble slab over it for an altar, and spent itself in devising senseless ornamentation which serves only to hide from our eyes the real character of our Lord's birthplace. The crib has of course disappeared. The thought remained. A manger crib, an altar, a church, a piece of liturgical symbolism—these are the elements which were to blossom forth into one of the most charming developments of Christian art.

There is, however, no ground for the assumption that there was at first more than a simple crib or manger brought into the churches and placed near or even upon the altar as a symbol of the Saviour's birth. The placing around it of persons or figures to represent Mary, Joseph, the shepherds, the wise men, and even Herod, was a later development, in the rise of which the medieval mysteries or miracle plays had no little part. And since the people, not content to look passively at this living picture, demanded action and movement, the manger or crib was transformed into a cradle. Mary rocked her Babe and in the Coventry Mystery sang:

Lullay, thou little tiny child,
By, by, lullay, lullay,
Lullay, thou little tiny child,
By, by, lullay, lullay.

Joseph was, of course, too important a person to be ignored. Besides, it would never do to permit him to stand listlessly beside the cradle without performing some service. Mary, therefore, calls upon him to help her rock her Babe. The German monk, Herman of Salzburg, in the fourteenth century, gives vocal expression to this thought and makes Mary sing:

Joseph, lieber neve min,
Hilf mir wiegen das Kindelin.

to which Joseph dutifully replies:

Gerne, liebe muome min,
Hilf ich dir wiegen din Kindelin.

If Joseph could thus render service, why not the shepherds—ay, why not the people to whom the Babe of Bethlehem was also come? And so we see the worshiping spectators singing and dancing around the crib like the cherubs in Lucas Cranach's woodcut of the Holy Family. Since it was manifestly impossible for all to have a turn at rocking the Babe, they joined in the singing, with the result that the Latin of the service was soon interspersed with the jubilant exclamations of the vulgar tongue, as, for instance, in Come, let us all sweet carols sing,

Omni relicto taedio,
Mary, Mother of our King,
Christoque Jesu Filio,
When she had borne that Holy Thing,
Reponit in Praesepio,
Reponit in Praesepio.

Since such cribs or mangers were a necessary article of furniture for the presentation of the Christmas mysteries, we may assume that they were used as early as the eleventh century, the date of the oldest miracle play which has come down to us. It is, therefore, incorrect to name St. Francis of Assisi as the first to prepare a crib or manger in connection with the Christmas mysteries. What St. Francis did was this: He led his congregation out in the darkness of the night into the forest of Greccio, where a stable with ox and ass (the two domestic animals always associated with the Saviour's birth, although not mentioned in the Gospels) standing at a crib or manger, had been arranged as a most realistic representation of the wonders of Bethlehem. A true child of his age, he turned to nature and brought the Christmas story into touch with its surroundings. He supplied the landscape background for the picture. The simple crib of the miracle play thus became a "Bethlehem"—the usual designation in the Netherlands for this representation of the Nativity.

There is another moment in the development of these scenes which must not be overlooked. The perfectly natural desire of the simple-minded spectators to take part in these scenes by rendering some service, rocking the cradle, touching the Babe, singing and rollicking about the group, inevitably led to confusion and disorder. One way to control this was by substituting carved figures for living personages. These had the additional advantage of readily lending themselves to the use of smaller churches, which lacked the room, furniture and means to present more elaborate scenes. Such "Bethlehem" or Nativity groups were thus fashioned by the medieval carvers, not only for the churches but for private use. Christmas more and more became a family rather than a church feast. Here the ancient customs and carols again came into their own. The Christmas crib or "Bethlehem" is to this day placed under the tree in some German homes. Despite its former widespread and long-continued use (we find them in every part of Europe from Sweden to Italy, from France to Poland), the crib or stable of Bethlehem has largely become a historical relic of a past age, with the result that their finer examples are now being collected and preserved in our art museums. There are two fine examples in the Morgan collection of the Metropolitan Museum, New York.

The place, however, to study these Christmas cribs or "Stable of Bethlehem" representations is the magnificent collection presented to the Bavarian National Museum by the wealthy banker, Kommerzienrath Max Schwederer. "The whole collection has grown to such dimensions that it now embraces five thousand separate objects and occupies a floor space of one thousand square meters."

We have adopted the Christmas tree and the Christmas garden. The Christmas garden is only the landscape setting of the Christmas crib, the historical development of which may be traced back to the day when pious pilgrims visited the grotto of Bethlehem and knelt before the manger in which their Lord was laid. And so the Christmas crib, this plastic representation of a Nativity scene, is but an echo of the shepherds' invitation: "Let us now go even unto Bethlehem and see this thing."

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, December 28. Joshua 3: 7-17. The only true greatness is conferred by the great and holy God. "This day will I begin to magnify thee in the sight of all Israel." That day did Joshua become clothed in mystic strength. The truly great are the God-possessed. The great ones of the world hold their sovereignty on very precarious tenure. A breath of public opinion, and it is gone! A whiff of death, and it is all over! Human glory shrivels like a moth in the flame; it falls away like tender blossoms in the frost. But the greatness which the Lord confers is a lasting glory, and retains its luster and freshness even in the hour of death.

"Thy gentleness hath made me great." His gentle communion is glory unspeakable. What honor can we desire which is comparable to the honor of entertaining God? To have the fellowship of his grace, and love, and truth? To have his strength dwelling near our wills, to have the immortal hope shedding its light upon our purposes? What greatness is theirs who have company and comforts like these? "The Lord is great"; and we are great in him.

MONDAY, December 29. Mark 9: 33-41. It is the child-spirit that finds life's golden gates, and that finds them all ajar. The proudly aggressive spirit, contending for place and power, may force many a door, but they are not doors which open into enduring wealth and peace. Real inheritances become ours only through humility. Life yields its secrets to the "meek and lowly in heart." If ever we are to enter the kingdom of power and glory a little child must lead us.

The proud are, therefore, self-deceived. They think they have succeeded when they have signally failed. They have the shadow, but they have missed the substance. They may have the applause of the world, but the angels sigh over their defeat. They pride themselves on having "got on"; the angels weep because they have "gone down."

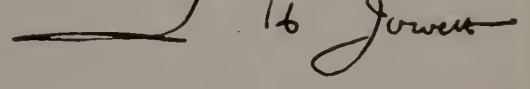
When we grow away from childlikeness we are "in a decline." "God resisteth the proud; he giveth grace to the humble." The lowly make great discoveries; to them the earth is full of God's glory.

TUESDAY, December 30. Matthew 21: 1-16. "Children crying in the temple, saying, Hosanna!" Children's voices mingling in the sounds of holy praise! A little child can share in the consecrated life. Young hearts can offer love pure as a limpid spring. Their sympathy is as responsive as the most sensitive harp, and yields to the touch of the tenderest joy and grief. Their smiles in gladness are sweet as sunshine, their tears in sadness are gentle as dew. All their nature is fresh and unabused; it is like the fresh green of the spring-time before the dust has fallen upon it or the city grime. No wonder the Lord "called little children unto him"! They were unto him as gracious streams, and as flowers of the field.

Let the loving Saviour have our children. Let there be no waiting for maturer years. Maturity may bring the impaired faculty and the embittered emotion. Let him have things in their beginnings, the seeds and the saplings. Let him have life before it is formed, before it is "set" in foolish molds. Let us consecrate the cradle, and the good Lord will grow and nourish his saints.

WEDNESDAY, December 31. Matthew 10: 29-42. It is a very wonderful thing that the finest services are within the power of the poorest people. The deepest ministries find their symbols in "cups of cold water" which it is in the power of everybody to give. The great benefactors are the great lovers, and their coin is not that of material money, but the wealth of the heart. A bit of affection is worth infinitely more than the gift of a necklace of pearls. To kindle hope in a fainting soul is far more precious than to adorn the weary pilgrim with dazzling gems. "He brought me heaps of presents, but I was hungering for love!" Such was the pathetic cry of one who was "clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day."

"Cups of cold water," simple ministries of refreshment, the love-thought, the love-prayer, the love-word—these are the privileged services of all of us. And everybody needs these gentle and gracious services of refreshment, and often there is greatest need where there seems to be least. Rich people feel the quickening power of simple kindnesses, for they get jaded and tired, and the soft touch of reality is like a draught from the waters of regeneration. When we carry about the ministry of simple love the thirsty souls will be refreshed all along the road.



DAILY MEDITATION FOR THE NEW YEAR

BY PROF. W. H. T. DAU

THURSDAY, January 1. Luke 2: 49. "How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

First recorded utterance of our Lord! He declares his origin and his destiny, the whence and the wherefore of his existence. He is Mary's Son, yes; but before Mary was, he is. He is "begotten of the Father, God from God." The Son of God became the Son of man. Jesus Christ is "true God, begotten of the Father from eternity, and also true man, born of the Virgin Mary." He is the God-man.

He came on earth, bent upon doing the work of God. The Father had business here for his Son. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "The Son came not to be ministered unto but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." The God-man is the Redeemer.

He "must be about" his Father's business. He must work while it is day. He cannot allow mere earthly relations to interfere with his heavenly mission. We shall hear him declare at the end of his career: "It is finished!" He was an incessant worker for our salvation. Doing and dying he was about God's business.

Paul says: "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." The Father of Jesus is also our Father. Jesus says to his brethren: "I ascend unto my Father and your Father." As good children we too must take an interest in the business of our heavenly Father. True, we cannot join Jesus in his work of redemption. That is work which he alone performed for us. But, redeemed by him and believing in him, we are asked to follow in his footsteps, and to be co-workers together with him. There is no more precious and glorious business than to serve the Father, as Jesus did, teaching men to know him and to trust in him, and working for men in loving self-sacrifice. Let this be my motto throughout this year, and my answer to all who may be surprised at me: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

FRIDAY, January 2. Matthew 3: 15. "Suffer it to be so now; for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." John the Baptist is amazed at the spectacle of the Lord coming to ask of him "the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." Just marvel! The sinless God-man numbered with the transgressors! He submits to an ordinance of God for man that he may "fulfil all righteousness." What God ordains is right; and to do God's will is perfecting righteousness. Men sneer at and belittle the covenants, the statutes, the precepts of the Lord. They still despise the counsel of God for their salvation, as John saw them doing in his day. This Man who stands before John in Jordan is different from all other men, not only in this, that he comes spontaneously to do righteousness, and to do it all, not omitting one jot or tittle, but that he does all this while in no need of righteousness for himself. For he is "holy, blameless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens." Though he came in the likeness of sinful flesh, and was made like unto us in all things, there is one point excepted: He is not like unto us in sin.

But he bears all sin, and for our sake, as our representative, he submits to the law, which argues sin and constrains the sinner. Ere this he had submitted to the ordinance of circumcision, to the law of purification and the redemption of the firstborn. He had gone down to Nazareth a dutiful child, and had been subject to his parents, and so on. He was a passionate achiever of righteousness that he might finish the work which the Father had given him to do. He is "the Lord our righteousness." "God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." His righteousness is the guerdon of our faith in him. He "is made unto us righteousness." "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Such an High Priest became us.

SATURDAY, January 3. Matthew 4: 4. "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Bread-winner, do you hear this? It is an old truth that Jesus utters. See Deut. 8: 3. Jesus enforces this truth by his own example. It is only the lower side in us that is supported by bread. "The life is more than meat." The animal's life, too, is sustained by physical food. To the immortal soul of man God offers the manna of his Word. Listen: "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live." Listen once more to one who made trial of this soul-feast: "Thy words were found, and I did eat them; and thy Word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart."

But God, who feeds the fowls of the air, supplies to those who seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness also meat and drink and raiment. "All these things shall be added unto you." If for a season they fail, faint not. There is a dignity in the want, or hunger, of a righteous man who will not stoop to receive his bread, to procure his livelihood, at the devil's suggestion. It is more blessed to hunger with Christ than to sit down to a banquet with Beelzebub. It is more honorable to walk in a patched garment which we acknowledge as a gift of God than to allow the great god Mammon to clothe us in silk and satin, in purple and fine linen. To have God and the promises of his Word with us in the desert of affliction is a feast for the soul. Whatever else we may lack, let us never be without this heavenly food.

Our Larger Table

THAT grand old Christian, Dr. Joseph Parker of London, on one occasion was congratulated by a friend of ours on the fact that his sermons were very widely read. "Yes," said Dr. Parker, with a twinkle in his eye, "the front seats of my auditorium are in the Himalayas and the back seats in the Rocky Mountains!" This was hyperbole, but fairly descriptive of the far-reaching influence of the eminent divine, who has since passed to his reward. Borrowing Dr. Parker's illustration, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD can say truthfully and not merely by way of similitude, that its Family Circle now well nigh surrounds the globe. This season, on account of the amazing increase in the number of our readers—an augmentation which is still going on—we have been compelled to recognize the needs of so large an audience by providing a menu of literary and spiritual entertainment for the coming year on a scale which we have never before attempted. Our readers will find the result of these preparations embodied in the splendid eight-page prospectus which forms a part of this issue and which gives to all the members of our Family Circle, old and new—not only those who have arrived, but those who are on the way—the promise of a twelvemonth of the rarest entertainment and edification. We invite all to read it carefully and to bring it to the attention of their friends who may be disposed to unite with us at the feast. Let every member bring a new guest along to share the good cheer. Welcome, one and all!

Poverty and Philanthropy

IT HAS been well said that poverty is too large a problem to be dealt with by private philanthropy. In every age the sad truth of Jesus' words, "The poor ye have always with you," has found abundant verification. Times without number the governments of the world have attempted the solution of the problem, only to meet failure. Even in our own prosperous land the army of the indigent is constantly growing, and the question of dealing with poverty has become an acute one. Those who are best qualified by experience to speak on the subject reluctantly admit that the situation as a whole has reached a stage where it demands other remedies than those supplied by philanthropy, which, while it unquestionably does a great deal of good, is altogether inadequate. Besides, there is a very large percentage of the worthy poor who hide their sorrows and suffer in silence, rather than make public appeal for charity.

That the problem of poverty is receiving the serious attention of our State legislatures is shown in the passage of Mothers' Pension Acts in some twenty-two different States. In almost every State peculiar difficulties are encountered in the operation of the law. Some of these we pointed out recently in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Since January 1, 1913, ten States, viz.: Utah, Washington, South Dakota, Idaho, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Jersey, Ohio, Iowa and Pennsylvania, have passed Mothers' Pension laws; California, Kansas, Oregon, Illinois, North Dakota, Colorado, Indiana, Michigan, New Hampshire, Wisconsin, and Oklahoma having previously enacted similar legislation. In almost all the States the pension is made dependent upon the worthiness of the applicant, who must be a widow with children. Some States grant relief to those whose husbands are in prison or have deserted their homes. In nearly every State the care and training of the children are taken into account. New York is now considering a similar step, but the prospect, viewed in the light of recent statistics, is not reassuring. There are in the metropolis alone 185,000 widows who would be pension claimants, most of them doubtless eligible under ordinary rules. In New York, in a larger degree than elsewhere, the enactment of a widow's pension law would mean a revolution in present relief methods. It would take out of the province of private charity much of the work it is now doing, but, being more systematic and extensive, it would get into closer touch and more intimate relations with the sources of suffering and be better informed than any private philanthropy as to the worthiness of applicants for the bounty of the State.

It is well to make a beginning in this big task of dealing with poverty. Doubtless, mistakes will be made and imperfect laws will have to be remedied; but if we can reach and help any considerable percentage of the really deserving poor, and assure the prospect of training the fatherless children for good citizenship, we shall have accomplished much.

Fair Weather Religion

THERE are many good people who carry their Christianity with them up to the sticking-point and there, for the moment at least, they drop it. It somehow seems to slip from them like a garment at the crisis, leaving the natural man revealed. Old chroniclers relate that the "good King Olaf," who was the first Norse ruler to embrace Christianity, in peace prayed to Christ, but whenever the din of strife smote on his ear, he shouted invocations to Thor and Odin and reached for his battle-ax. So with many to-day who, at church or prayer meeting, or in the home, are as devout and kind and reverent as could be wished; but when the struggle of business calls them, they put everything else aside and "put up a man's fight." The old tumultuous, aggressive spirit is strong in most of us. We are apt to hark back, at the pinch, to the way of the natural man, which is the way of might and force and power, too often regardless of right and truth and justice. But when, through God's grace, the real work of regeneration begins in the heart, all this is changed. The call of the world loses its power over us. We see things from a new and better angle. Honors, influence, fame, riches and the rewards that fall to those who are victors in the material struggle, we learn to appreciate at their true value, and to feel, however desirable they may be when they come worthily and are rightly used, that they are insignificant by contrast with the immortal prize that awaits the victor in the good fight of faith and righteousness. If we only keep the crown steadily in view, as Paul kept it, we will be far less apt to throw our religion aside when the world assails with its bewildering temptations.

The Price of Eggs

CONGRESS has taken up the egg question in earnest as the entering wedge for regulating the cold storage industry. In a speech before the House a few days ago by Representative McKellar of Tennessee, it was claimed that the great meat packers, who had taken up the egg business as a side issue, were responsible for the present exaggerated cost of this particular article of diet. According to the speaker, 4,100,000 cases of eggs had been placed in cold storage, enabling the holders to control the market in the season of scarcity, and eggs which cost the combine from $2 to $3 per case were sold to the retailers at $7.50 to $9 per case, or from 225 to 300 per cent. advance. Eggs had been forced up to a higher price than has ever been known. Another point worth keeping in view is that while eggs may be kept for three months in storage without deterioration, there is a perceptible decline in quality in six months' storage eggs, which is still more marked after nine months. It has been lately demonstrated by practical experiments in New York on a considerable scale, that eggs which are now selling at 50 to 60 cents per dozen can be retailed at 33 cents and yield a reasonable profit. When it is understood that foodstuffs worth between $2,500,000,000 and $3,000,000,000 are now going into cold storage annually, and that the single item of eggs yields such a tremendous percentage of profit to the holders, some idea may be formed of the mountainous profits exacted by the cold storage combines on other articles.

There is, no doubt, a good deal of wrongheaded argument on the cold storage problem, which arises from misunderstanding. Properly conducted, the cold storage system would regulate prices at certain seasons of the year, and were this done with reasonable regard to the law of supply and demand, there could be no ground for complaint. But the system has been made a means of reckless extortion. What science devised for the benefit of the whole people, greedy speculators have transformed into an agent of hardship and oppression. If, in the congressional inquiry, all the facts concerning cold storage abuses should be permitted to come out, it will probably be seen that the legislative ax, judiciously wielded, is capable of splitting present prices in such a way that the fabulous cost of foodstuffs which oppresses all classes will be forced down along the whole list of the necessaries of life.

Crime and Hysteria

TO ANY one who has studied the annals of crime, the sensational stories that have been published lately regarding the methods of mysterious criminals who prick their women victims in theaters and public conveyances with poisoned needles or hypodermic instruments, can easily be recognized as a revival of similar stories that have been current from time to time ever since the days of the Salem "witches," against whom the charge of pin-pricking was frequently brought. It is, of course, not impossible that such a thing might happen at rare intervals in any large city; but the strong probability is that most of the cases recently reported are due to plain hysteria. Any criminal attempting such a thing in a public place, if detected or even suspected, would hardly be able to escape summary vengeance. Thus far, not a single case has been conclusively traced to the needle-plying criminals. On the other hand, several mysterious disappearances are in a way to be explained by revelations that give no hint of the public application of the Borgian art. It is a good thing to have these ghoulish sensations punctured and exposed, although, as in the present instance, the disillusion may come rather late. But human nature is ever credulous, and there are many people so constituted that they would not abate one thrill, no matter how improbable the story.

General Notes

—POSTMASTER GENERAL BURLESON has graciously increased the weight limit of packages to be carried in the first two zones about any point from twenty to fifty pounds, rates unchanged. The weight in additional zones is increased from eleven to twenty pounds, with reduction in rate in all excepting the last two zones. This is but another step in the gradual development of the Parcel Post system, and it is an excellent mathematical exercise to attempt to master the intricacies of the schedule at any given time. So long as changes are in the general direction of the above, the exercise is not without satisfaction.

—THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE, Chicago, enrolled 1,947 students for the last year, as against 1,659 the previous fiscal year. They represent twenty-seven different denominations, 37 States and 23 foreign countries. One hundred and forty-two of this number graduated in the different courses and have gone, or are going, literally, to the "uttermost parts of the earth" to carry the tidings of salvation. Students attended, conducted or rendered other services in 16,033 religious meetings held in churches, missions and factories, jails, car-barns, station-houses, and in the open air. They taught 13,161 Bible classes; made 21,244 personal calls and conversed with 35,722 persons on the subject of salvation. In the Gospel wagon alone, 35,632 tracts and 3,481 copies of the Gospels were distributed. Moreover, they had the joy of reporting 4,721 souls who professed conversion to Jesus Christ. This is only a partial summary of the work.

Raphael's Madonna Brings Fortune

RAPHAEL'S "Madonna and Child," the chief treasure of the late Earl Cowper's collection at Panshanger, Hertfordshire, was purchased the other day of Lord Desborough by a firm of art dealers for an amount supposed to be over $500,000. One of the conditions of the sale was that the British Government should have an option on the purchase, which has been declined, and it is understood that it will find its way at once to America. The picture is on a panel two inches thick and measures 23x17 inches. It represents the Virgin wearing a red tunic, cut square over the breast, and a blue mantle lined with green, seated in the open air, holding the naked Child on her left hand, he resting one foot on his mother's right hand, and placing his arm around her neck. He appears to grasp behind the Virgin's head the loose-falling veil. In the distance on the right is a church, and on the left an open landscape with a winding river. Raphael painted this picture in 1505, and it has long been counted as one of the most valuable art treasures of the world. The frame of the picture, which is over a hundred years old, is being replaced by a more beautiful and becoming one preparatory to its transfer to the United States. It is claimed that the price is the largest amount ever paid for a picture in the history of the world. Rembrandt's "Mill" brought $500,000; Van Dyck's gem of the Cattaneo collection brought a similar amount. Next to this sum $400,000 was paid for a Gainsborough, for a Frans Hals portrait, and for a Velasquez portrait of Olivares. Rembrandt's "Polish Rider" sold for $300,000, and Turner's "Pas de Calais" for $200,000. Most of these enormous prices were paid by American millionaires. Many of the wealthy citizens of this country are devoted and generous patrons of art. The masters of fine art through the generations have gone to the Bible for their inspiration and their themes. The artists have reached their climax in the supreme thought of God in the Babe given to the Virgin to be the hope and the Saviour of the world. It is no accident that Raphael should have reached the summit of his genius and fame in portraying the Child Jesus, and that money is compelled to pay a fabulous price for this ideal picture of supreme holiness, truth and love. The prophet saw the Babe and said:

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given. (Isa. 9: 6.)

Money-Cursed Son

A YOUNG man twenty-three years old, heir to $150,000, passed a forged check for $100 on the proprietor of a leading New York City hotel the other day and was sentenced to the reformatory at Elmira by Judge Mulqueen in the Court of General Sessions. The young man's father died a year or so ago, and left him by will $10,000 in cash, with an additional income of $1,000, and $150,000 when he shall reach the age of thirty. In a little over a year he had gotten rid of the $10,000 and committed a crime to get more money to waste on his iniquities. He was a bad boy, and a very bad young man. His father meant everything for the best, but the $10,000 was a curse to him. It relieved him of the necessity of toil, so healthful to virtue, and led him easily into the jaws of sharks of every kind. He found that vice was very expensive, that it did not take the saloons, the disorderly houses, or the gambling hells long to get his $10,000 away from him, and to lay the hand of the law upon him as a felon. Some young sons of wealth have the intellectual and moral stamina to be safely entrusted with large sums of money, but they are the exception. In most instances such a course makes the greatest disaster. It is to be hoped that the penalty will awaken a deep sense of disgrace and a determination to reform and make good use of his time and money. There is only one thing for a young man, rich or poor, to do, and that is to obey the laws of labor, self-support and integrity. It is to be hoped that the young man, like the prodigal who wasted in riotous living the substance his father had given him, may sincerely say:

I will arise and go to my father. (Luke 15: 18.)

Ashes of Body Scattered

JUST before sundown a black automobile hearse, accompanied by one motor car, moved out to the middle of Brooklyn Bridge and stopped. Two men opened the hearse and lifted from it a small urn, and going to the rail scattered to the winds over the waters of the dark river beneath the ashes of Charles W. Presley, a contractor of Manhattan. He died on September 18. In his will he directed that his body be cremated, and that, precisely at the hour of sundown on November 30, the ashes be flung from Brooklyn Bridge. The instructions of the will were carried out to the letter. The disposition of the body at death has nothing whatever to do with the condition of the soul. The Egyptians embalmed the bodies of the dead and preserved them for ages as relics. The Romans burned the bodies of their loved ones and kept their ashes in sacred urns. It has been the general custom, especially among nations most highly civilized, to bury the dead, and guard with care their hallowed graves. How precious the graves of loved ones under the shelter of the evergreens and the perfume of the flowers, where tears of affection may fall, sweet memories console, silent meditation instruct, and fervent prayer inspire. God's children, in the old and new dispensations, through all the centuries buried their dead. Joseph, according to the custom of the Egyptians, had his father Jacob embalmed, but after that, according to the custom of the Hebrews, he took his body up to Canaan for burial.

For his sons carried him into the land of Canaan, and buried him in the cave of the field of Machpelah, which Abraham bought with the field for the possession of a burying-place of Ephron the Hittite, before Mamre. (Gen. 50: 13.)

SUFFRAGE COMMITTEE VISITS THE WHITE HOUSE

ON DECEMBER 8 a rearguard of one hundred women, representing the National Suffrage Association, whose forty-fifth annual convention had just closed; marched to the White House to persuade President Wilson to aid the movement, either by sending a special message to Congress or by commending it in his next general message. He received them pleasantly and answered diplomatically, pointing out the fact that he did not feel at liberty to urge upon Congress policies which had not received the "organic consideration" of those for whom he is spokesman. He had never presented his private views on any subject in any legislature, and never would, because he regarded it as a part of the whole process of government that he should now be spokesman for others, not for himself. This principle compelled him to confine himself to those policies that had been outlined in the party platforms. He had expressed his personal opinion that, as the Senate already has a special committee on the suffrage, it would be a proper thing for the House to have one also; but he did not feel at liberty to urge legislation upon Congress for the reason stated. The delegation, fain to be content with this explanation, thanked the President and departed. In picturing his ideal republic Plato (427-347 B.C.) held that the women of the qualified class should have equal political privileges with the other sex; but long before his day, the five daughters of Zelophehad, a descendant of Joseph, bereft of their parents and having no brothers, secured a new inheritance law for women by presenting themselves before Moses the lawgiver, demanding a "possession among the brethren" of their fathers: "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, The daughters of Zelophehad speak right." (Num. 27: 4-7.)

Bowling Green Past and Present

ONE of the most significant facts of our present civilization is the rush from the rural districts to the cities in all parts of the world. This rush has its friendly and unfriendly features with reference to the development of the race. The world has witnessed no such rapid migration as that toward New York City, which has suddenly pushed itself into the position of the second city of the earth, with the certainty of leading London in the near future. The swift growth and change of New York City can be measured by a contrast between the Bowling Green of to-day and that of the past. The lower point of Manhattan Island was at first the important part, and, in fact, the only part of the city. Beautiful residences adorned it, and it was the seat of a lovely social and home life. Up to as late as twenty-five years ago, the Bowling Green section at the lower point of the island retained the old, restful, rural aspect. The low-roofed houses, the old style residences, the beautiful shade trees, the velvety-green grass, the lovely flowers and the laughing fountains furnished a place of rest and social entertainment. This was a relic of the old locality so famous socially in the time of the Dutch occupation, when it was a famous resort. It took its name because it was the "bowling" place and the scene of other sports. It was the place where the burghers, with their wives, their children and their sweethearts, used to spend the beautiful summer evenings. Now the scene is changed. The tall sky-scrapers keep out the air and the sunlight, and their clerks and trade have driven the people out and off to found new homes. In marking this and the other signs of marvelous growth we are reminded of some of the enormously large cities of the past. The prophet makes this reference to one:

Now Nineveh was an exceeding great city. (Jonah 3: 3.)

Government Bread-making

IT IS not a new thing for the United States Government to bake bread for its soldiers, its sailors, and the inmates of many of its institutions. But it is a new thing for the government to have scientific bakery for the purposes of experimentation. The Department of Agriculture at Washington had been testing flours, and found it necessary to be thorough in the trials to make bread. Hence a bakery was installed in connection with the Bureau of Chemistry at Washington, and Miss H. L. Wessling, an expert in the branch laboratory of chemistry in Chicago, was selected to take charge of the new scientific bakery. The outfit consists of a number of stone mixing jars with glass covers, in which the fermentation may be watched without disturbing the temperature; a kneading-knife, a rising-closet, and a number of gas and electric ovens. The dough is placed in the rising-closet under a temperature of 86 degrees Fahrenheit. The dough is taken out three times and kneaded. After the third time the loaf is placed in a baking pan, covered with a damp cloth, and put in the rising-closet. By the side of it is placed a tiny loaf pinched from the larger portion. When this little sample loaf has risen to the desired volume, the larger loaf is taken out and placed in the oven heated to 400 degrees Fahrenheit, where it is allowed to remain forty minutes, when it is taken out ready for use. The bakery is trying to find a cheaper substitute for cereal flour now used in order that the high price of living may be reduced. Extensive and successful experiments have been made with banana flour, potato flour, and meals made from dasheens, soy beans, chestnuts, and other products. This is important, as the enormous increase of the population of the globe and the relatively small wheat crop will compel additional material for bread. It is well that science in the last decade or two should have marked such progress in the manufacture of bread. Many servants are excellent breadmakers, but in many homes heavy, indigestible stuff has been served as bread which is a menace to the public health. What bread is to the body of the individual or nation, Christ is to the soul, the staff of life. This truth the Master himself thus declares:

For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world. (John 6: 33.)

AMERICAN SAILORS ABROAD

ON OCTOBER 25 nine battleships of the United States Navy, in command of Rear Admiral Charles J. Badger, flagship Wyoming, and with a train composed of one hospital ship and three colliers, left Hampton Roads for an educational cruise to Mediterranean ports. From start to finish, for the ships have now returned, this has proved one of the most picturesque and satisfactory excursions arranged by the department.

The fleet arrived in the Mediterranean on November 8, and the ships were distributed among various ports. Not the least remarkable feature is the fact that these vessels, with their combined crews of over seven thousand men, were wholly independent of outside aid, having carried with them supplies, including coal, sufficient for all their needs until their arrival again in home ports.

The declared object of the cruise "was to afford an opportunity to the officers and enlisted men to see foreign countries and to broaden their experience." Probably there was the undeclared object of giving these friendly foreign cities an opportunity to see American seamen at their best and thus broaden their knowledge of the home of the Monroe Doctrine. Certainly both objects were accomplished.

THE OBJECT OF THE CRUISE WAS TO BROADEN THE ENLISTED MEN'S EXPERIENCE

While the fleet was in the Mediterranean the officers and men passed a great deal of their time ashore sight-seeing and enjoying the hospitalities that were lavished on them. And when the ships gathered from various points for rendezvous, preparatory to the start home on December 3, the wireless brought glowing despatches lauding the conduct of the Americans while on foreign soil.

It is this special praise elicited by the enlisted men of our navy that proves the cruise to have been timely and well planned. Their reception had been most cordial, and their departure was accompanied by many scenes of friendly good will. The mayor of Naples, who went aboard the battleships when on visit there, expressed the satisfaction of the people of that city for the long visit the Americans had made. At Genoa, Marseilles and Rome the authorities took pains to express their great admiration of the American sailors. "Their bearing was irreproachable; their manners showed good education. They taught us French, who pay no heed to the 'Marseillaise,' a lesson when they stood rigidly at attention during the rendition of 'The Star-spangled Banner,'" is the utterance of one French paper. This is typical of the praise bestowed upon our representatives of the navy.

In a cruise of this character there are many opportunities for dissipating prejudice and misconception, and in their places establishing what may be called small unit zones of international trust and goodwill. The visits ashore of groups of American sailors, respectfully and delightedly viewing the objects of interest in various cities, their orderly attendance at pleasure resorts, the zeal with which they entered into the competitive sports arranged for their benefit, have in this case proved potent factors for peace.

The fleet passed Gibraltar outward bound on Thursday, December 4, composed of the Wyoming, Delaware, Connecticut, Utah, Arkansas, Ohio, Kansas, Florida and Vermont, with the hospital and supply ships and the three colliers. The fleet stopped outside the Straits to transfer militiamen and for the funeral of a seaman, after which they pointed their bows toward home.

TOPICS OF INTEREST AT HOME AND ABROAD

The Nobel Prizes

ON DECEMBER 10 of each year the Swedish institutions charged with that duty award five prizes of $40,000 each, together with gold medals and diplomas, to the persons who, in their judgment, have made the most notable contributions to physics, chemistry, medicine, literature and peace. These munificent prizes were provided for by the will of a Swedish inventor, Alfred Bernard Nobel, who died in 1896, and their distribution is always a matter of wide interest.

Until this year only three Americans had received the Nobel prizes: Theodore Roosevelt, peace, 1906; Professor A. Michelson, physics, 1907; and Dr. Alexis Carrel, medicine, 1912. A fourth American has now been honored through the presentation of the peace prize to Senator Elihu Root. Mr. Root's effective work in connection with the pacification of the Philippines and Cuba, and with American-Japanese interests, and his services in behalf of arbitration treaties and international peace, are the basis of this award, which will be very popular.

The prize in literature was awarded to the Hindu poet Rabindranath Tagore of the province of Bengal. Though comparatively little known to American readers, Tagore has written poetry of the highest order, his dominant theme being the [illegible] and love for humanity. He now becomes a world figure, and it is interesting to know that he comes of a cultivated family which has counted among its members writers, artists, statesmen and educators. His father was one of the spiritual leaders of India and was called by the people Maharshi, "the Great Sage." The poet is described as a true philosopher, a spiritual leader and patriot, and a fine type of "lord of the manor" over the tenantry and dependents on his large British India estate.

Notable Conventions

TO BORROW the phraseology of seed catalogues, this is the time of year we may look for a profusion of conventions. The very important gathering of the Women's Suffrage Association had scarcely departed from Washington, leaving behind a delegation to complete its work with the President, when the Women's Christian Temperance Union assembled in Washington for a demonstration against the liquor traffic. This body also focused its efforts on Congress. Two thousand men and women marched to the Capitol, bearing petitions demanding national prohibition by constitutional amendment.

The same body presented a resolution suggesting that Congress prohibit forever the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors except for sacramental and medicinal purposes. These temperance militants marched to the Capitol with waving banners, and the scene was one of great enthusiasm.

Another determined body of reformers met in Washington the same week, representing various movements for the protection of animals against cruelty. The entire field of humane treatment of animals was included in the work of this convention, but the outstanding note seemed to be for the abolishment of vivisection; the convention, in fact, was named the International Anti-Vivisection and Animal Protection Congress. Delegates assembled from foreign countries as well as the United States. The purpose was to cause a distinct advance throughout the world in the interests of dumb animals.

Open-Air Gospel Work

AT THE meetings held by the Evangelistic Committee of New York City the past year men stood by the hundred, sometimes by the thousand, under the noonday sun or the starlit sky, listening to exposition of Scripture, followed by direct personal appeal. So intense was the interest manifested that plans were made for the organization of Bible classes as a permanent nucleus for holding the men together during the winter. The Evangelistic Committee during its ninth campaign conducted open-air services at 100 centers, shop meetings at 31, and tent meetings at 12. The attendance at the 2,586 meetings held during the season is reported to be 679,851, an increase of 268,318 over 1912. All these people were reached at a per capita expense of four cents, probably the lowest of any form of Christian work in America. Children's meetings were held nightly in tents and in some open-air centers; 95,689 boys and girls were assembled in the various meetings. Most of these children had never been to any Sunday school and knew nothing of religious instruction or moral training until taught in the tents.

Holiday Greeting

CHRISTIAN HERALD FOR 1914

J. Wilbur Chapman

Hugh Black

Charles M. Sheldon

Reuben A. Torrey

Bishop Wm. A. Quayle

Pastor Charles Wagner

NEVER in its history has The Christian Herald been able to announce in advance such a wealth of inspiring features as are presented in this prospectus for 1914. We have planned, as usual, to deal with subjects of the deepest interest and of the greatest helpfulness to American homes. And we have been unusually successful in enlisting the aid of gifted writers and teachers. They will not only bring you messages that will instruct and entertain and cheer you for the moment, but suggestions that will help you to live a year of gladness and spread that gladness to others.

Men and women who are famous in many walks of life will give the benefit of their experience in interesting and helpful contributions. Great preachers will tell the old, old story of Salvation; missionaries and explorers will relate their travels and adventures; poets will sing their sweetest songs, and brilliant authors will relate their most attractive stories.

There will be articles of special interest and value about the work of the Federal departments at Washington, giving practical hints as to how these departments may be used by every American citizen. There will be discussions of the great problems that are engaging the attention of the American people, questions of the school, the farm, the church. The life of prayer, the study of the Bible, the work of the church in foreign fields, are all included in the 1914 program.

A Splendid Sermon Every Week

THE preaching of the Gospel continues to be a mighty force in winning the world for Christ. It is wonderful to think that right down through the centuries men who have been called of God have delivered the message of salvation, and announced to the people of earth the will of our Father who is in heaven. In this year of grace 1914 some of the most powerful of these modern prophets will speak their message in the weekly sermons appearing in The Christian Herald.

All of the leading Protestant denominations will be represented in these sermons. They will do much to clear away the threatening clouds of unbelief and worldliness, giving a clearer view of Christ, revealing more of the nature of God, and showing the real meaning of life. They will point the way of salvation and the paths of Christian service.

Among those who will contribute these 52 vital, helpful Sermons will be the following:

J. H. Jowett, Hugh Black, Amzi C. Dixon, J. Wilbur Chapman, Charles M. Sheldon,
H. P. Eckhardt, Reuben A. Torrey, Bishop Wm. A. Quayle, Charles Lewis Slattery, Charles H. Parkhurst,
John P. Peters, Albert B. Simpson, Charles A. Eaton, Dietrich H. Steffens, Charles L. Goodell,
A. H. C. Morse, John H. C. Fritz, W. Jasper Howell, Richard Braunstein, Bishop Luther B. Wilson,
David J. Burrell, O. T. Fletcher, Richard W. Jungfer, Bishop Joseph C. Hartzell, Pastor Wagner of Paris,
C. A. Mutch, C. H. Pannkoke, Pastor Dryander of Berlin, Newell Dwight Hillis, Russell H. Conwell

Professor Dau's Daily Meditations

A BIBLE THOUGHT FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

IT was a fortunate choice for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers when Prof. W. H. T. Dau was selected to provide the Daily Meditations for the coming year. We know of no other writer in America who can so well meet the spiritual requirements of a task which that distinguished pastor, Dr. J. H. Jowett, has so admirably performed during the year now closing. In his opening "Meditation" for January 1, 1914, Prof. Dau deals with the first recorded utterance of our Lord, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" and in his comment adds, "As good children, we too must take an interest in the business of our heavenly Father. True, we cannot join Jesus in his work of redemption. That is work which he alone performs for us, but, redeemed by him and believing in him, we are asked to follow in his footsteps and to be co-workers together with him. There is no more precious and glorious 'business' than to serve the Father as Jesus did, teaching men to know him and to trust him, and working for men in loving self-sacrifice. Let this be my motto throughout this year and my answer to all who may be surprised at me: . . . 'Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?' 'The Son came not to be ministered unto but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.' The God-man is the Redeemer. He 'must be about' his Father's business. He must work while it is day. He cannot allow mere earthly relations to interfere with his heavenly mission. We shall hear him declare at the end of his career: 'It is finished!' He was an incessant worker for our salvation. Doing and dying he was about God's business. . ."

Prof. W. H. T. Dau

These meditations will be found an unfailing daily refreshment and invigoration. Every sunrise has its appropriate thought and its morning tonic. Like a walk in a pleasant garden or a shady woodland by the side of a stream, the Meditations will lead us into attitudes of contemplation and reverent thought which will give strength and grace for the duties of the day. Let them be your "morning portion," and you will find the time well invested. They will be among the choicest attractions of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD during the coming year, and will be greatly appreciated by its readers everywhere.

The Old Evangelism and the New

Dwight L. Moody

A GREAT controversy has raged for many months past over the question of modern evangelistic methods. Many hold that the true spiritual note has gone out of evangelism and that the Pentecostal fire has died out. The "lost chord" is lamented by those who recall the phenomenal spiritual campaigns of the past. Such leaders as Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, Dr. Biederwolf, Professor Torrey and a few others have given vitality to a movement looking toward a general reform in present evangelistic methods. They take the ground that there is too much of a tendency to commercialize spiritual work nowadays, and that evangelists and pastors should work harmoniously together to win souls. The progress of the proposed Federation and the merits of the reforms in view will be thoroughly discussed by leading evangelists and pastors in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD during 1914.

There is little doubt that the outcome of the present movement will be reform in evangelistic methods all along the line, and that the change, far from tending to diminish the spiritual enthusiasm, will rather emphasize and strengthen it, since evangelists and pastors will be brought into harmonious and cordial co-operation. This is as it should be. No longer will the pastor look upon the evangelist as a trouble-bringer in the church; no longer will the congregations be led to regard the evangelistic worker as a sensationalist. Where all unite together in loving harmony the spiritual fires will not burn fitfully, but clearly and steadily, and the work will go on better than before.

The World's Largest Sunday School

Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

A CENSUS of the National Sunday School Class conducted in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD every week, under the capable direction of Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts, would show that it is far and away the largest class of its kind in the whole world. With a membership extending through all the States and Territories and the Colonies, it is estimated by the conductors themselves (judging from the extent of their correspondence during the whole year) that the total membership is not very far from the million mark. This continent-wide class includes hundreds of Sunday schools of various denominations, and the teachers find in the week's lesson, which appears well in advance in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, a source of inspiration and accurate information that supplies all their needs in the class-room, and enables them to do most efficient work among their pupils. The International Sunday School Lesson is dealt with in a comprehensive way, and optional lessons are given whenever occasion requires.

There are many ways of teaching Sunday school, but the right way is the best, and it is the way that brings to the teacher and the pupil alike the latest resources of scholarship and the best progressive teaching methods. This is a marked characteristic of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunday School Class. Its teachers, who have traveled practically all over the world, speak with a personal knowledge of the lands and cities and historic places, and the descendants of the ancient peoples who are dealt with in the lessons.

Explorations in Bible Lands

EVERY year brings new revelations as the result of research in Bible Lands by such eminent archeologists as Professors Hilprecht, Heilprin, Winckler and other distinguished investigators. Bible students all over the world are watching with intense interest the results of these researches in Egypt, Babylonia, Palestine, Arabia, Assyria and Asia Minor. In the valley of the Euphrates, which modern civilization has at last invaded, tremendous discoveries are anticipated. The Babylonian expeditions of the University of Pennsylvania have been fruitful of many great "finds" that have shed a new light on the Scripture narrative, and given us glimpses of religious conditions of a date long before Abraham came out of Ur of the Chaldees. Stories of the Creation, the Deluge, the Confusion of Tongues at Babel, the early kingdoms and the remotest traces of the civilization, literature and laws of those days are all being uncovered for the world's instruction. Such ancient races as the Sumerians, the Chaldeans and the Hittites are no longer veiled in obscurity; their kings and their achievements are now becoming known. Inscriptions on stone, religious emblems, and figures denoting the forms of worship and even the customs and usages of those men and women of a far-off age have come to light.

Prof. Edgar J. Banks

These explorations lead us back to the beginnings of things. They show the commanding figure of the first human law-maker, Hammurabi. New light is thrown on the personalities of the Old Testament. We get new ideas concerning the star-gazers of Chaldea and the infancy of astronomy, and we see passing before us in retrospect the tremendous drama of rising and falling empires.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has arranged for a series of articles during 1914 from distinguished Orientalists dealing with these discoveries. The series will be of priceless value to all Bible readers, and its importance may be estimated from the fact that there are now in the possession of investigators in this country many thousands of tablets that are in process of being deciphered. Eminent philologists are at work on these tablets, some of which are mere fragments. When fully translated they will let in a flood of light on the secrets of the races who lived in the "morning of the world."

A New Oriental Travel Series

By DR. FRANCIS E. CLARK, OF THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

IN view of the extraordinary popularity of Dr. Clark's series of illustrated articles of travel among the cities of the early Christian Church in Bible lands, we have arranged with him for a new series, in which he unfolds still further, in his own delightful fashion, the charm and mystery of the ancient East. Concerning these articles, Dr. Clark writes: "I made a special journey to all the cities I have described, and did this in behalf of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, feeling that I could not write about them as intelligently and helpfully as I desired, without actually seeing them. This final series further follows the footsteps of St. Paul, and relates to Tarsus, Jerusalem, Tyre, Damascus, Sidon, Antioch, Syracuse, Rome, and possibly two or three others. I found very much of interest in each of those cities, and have tried to describe them as they look to-day, as well as tell about their ancient greatness and their connection with the life of the great apostle. All of these contribute something to an understanding of his life."

Francis E. Clark, D.D., LL.D.

To those who have followed the travels of the early apostles, as related in the Acts and as further detailed in the Pauline Epistles, this new series of articles by Dr. Clark will have an interest far exceeding that of any other recent work on the subject. Those were the days in which the literature of the early church was in the making; the days when congregations met in private houses, in the woodlands, in the open fields or on the hillside; the days when the relations of the little bands of Christians were those of fraternal love and hospitality, and when they "had all things in common." From such early beginnings the organization now known as the Christian church has expanded mightily, until its utmost branches reach out to the ends of the earth.

Dr. Clark's new series will be beautifully illustrated by photographs taken by Mrs. Clark, who is his companion in all his journeyings. These letters, like all that comes from the same entertaining author, will prove timely, interesting and profitable, rich in information which every reader will prize—the best possible substitute for an expensive trip to Southern Europe, the Mediterranean and the Near East. The new series will begin early in 1914, appearing at frequent intervals during the year.

The Church and the Workingman

O. H. Pannkoke

IN DEALING with the problem of the church's declining influence with the masses, one is reminded of the old poem which tells how the "parish priest of austerity" spent most of his time in the high church steeple, instead of mingling with the folk below, like a good pastor. Being one day summoned by a Voice of authority to "Come down!" he inquired: "Where art thou, Lord?" "Down here among my people," came the thunderous reply, in rebuke for his exclusiveness and indifference to the wants of his flock. If the modern church ever hopes to win back the multitudes, it must "come down" to them; it must help them to bear their burdens, sympathize with them in their sorrows and trials, and emulate in every way the example of the Master, who was a lover of and a dweller among the common people, who heard Him gladly." Under the able direction of Rev. O. H. Pannkoke, a recognized authority on the urgent problems that confront the church and the nation to-day, a number of leading Americans will contribute articles on this great problem during the coming year, dealing with the church's attitude toward labor and capital, the unevangelized masses, Socialism, poverty and other phases of our social and economic life as they exist to-day. These articles will be found intensely interesting and full of practical suggestions for pastors and laymen and for all who are desirous of bringing back the old-time influence of the Christian Church with the common people. They will be of practical service in pointing the way out of the difficulty.

The Balance Sheet of Christianity

John R. Mott

WHAT Christianity has accomplished in the world is not to be estimated by glancing at isolated parts of the great field of humanity, but by taking the field as a whole. The skilful commander knows that the fortunes of a single brigade or detachment do not determine the general result. Christianity has suffered gigantic persecutions, and has encountered tremendous difficulties; yet from its very foundation, 1,900 years ago, the whole record of the religion of Jesus Christ has been one of tremendous and amazing progress. The group that followed him in his earthly career, and that numbered only a few thousands after his departure, at the end of the first century had grown to half a million. In the fourth century it was an army of 10,000,000 strong; in the tenth century 40,000,000; in the fifteenth century 100,000,000; in the eighteenth century 200,000,000, and to-day it is estimated by Fournier de Flaix (the leading authority on the religions of the world) at nearly 500,000,000. The religion of Jesus to-day is making progress at a greater rate than at any time in its previous history. Its army of missionaries is constantly increasing. Last year 28,000,000 Bibles and portions, in 500 different languages, were issued by the Bible societies and publishing houses, prominent among the latter being THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. To stimulate and hasten the great work of world-conquest for Christ, this journal is preparing "The Balance Sheet of Christianity," which will be the most complete and convincing presentation of the subject ever issued.

Pollyanna Will Appear Again

WHEN Mrs. Porter wrote Pollyanna, she could hardly have realized what a great thing she was doing. She was creating a unique figure in fiction—a figure to rank with "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and "Anne of Green Gables"—the two most popular little girl heroines. When the story first appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD people kept silent and read with deep, absorbing interest. Then the letters began to come in—short letters and long letters, asking about Pollyanna and telling their appreciation of her and sympathizing with her troubles. They wondered if there really was a Pollyanna, and if she looked like her pictures, and if she really had an aunt like the child in the story.

For a time just plain letters arrived—and then another thing happened. People began to play the "Glad Game." And from all over the country a new type of letter came in—letters from grown-ups and kiddies, from "shut-ins" and from hopeless ones. And every one of the letters said: "I am playing the 'Glad Game,'" or "I am trying to be like Pollyanna." Perhaps you will be able to realize just what the little Glad Girl means to the hundreds of thousands who have read about her.

Eleanor H. Porter

And now we have something to tell you—it would be a secret if there had not been a heading to this paragraph. Pollyanna is coming back to us! Coming back to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, with all of her joy and happiness! Pollyanna is coming back—but not the same Pollyanna who went away. For this heroine is our little girl grown up! Can you imagine anything better than a young lady Pollyanna, with a whole new set of adventures and experiences?

Mrs. Porter is now working on the manuscript of the new book. It is nearly finished, and when it has been completed it will be shipped down straight away to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office.

We need not tell you that you are going to enjoy the story—of course you will, for Mrs. Porter's new book will be just as interesting and just as exciting and just as glad as the very first glimpse of Pollyanna; and the new, grown-up heroine will fill the place in your hearts that the little girl owned.

Do You Know Your Bible?

Dr. George H. Sandison

THE Department of Bible Study, conducted under the same management as last year, will begin a new series for 1914 in which the lives and characters of twelve of the most interesting personalities of the Bible will be studied, not in a stereotyped manner, but in a way to profitably stimulate Bible research and to help readers to master the lessons taught us by the lives of these Old and New Testament characters. It will throw a new light on Bible biography.

It's a totally different form of Bible study from that ordinarily followed—something quite new. The element of human interest is kept prominent. The "honor roll" is printed every month, in which appear the names of the readers who have answered the greatest number of questions. At the end of the year prizes are awarded to those who have made the best record. There is no formality about enrolling. Any one can join the class at any time. Old and new members will engage heartily in this work of Bible study for 1914, getting better acquainted with Bible heroes and heroines.

The Bible and Newspaper

THE Bible and Newspaper, edited by Dr. Ferdinand Cowle Iglehart, records current facts in this and other countries, and with them interprets intellectual, sociological, moral and religious truths. The facts are selected from farm, mart, shop, mine, home, school and church. The page sparkles with the jewels of thought and beautiful sentiment. It is deep in its convictions and fearless in their expression. Some of the ablest ministers, editors and speakers of the country regularly use its facts and incidents as illustrations for their sermons, editorials and addresses. The page draws from the daily newspaper with its live people and important facts. It also refers to the Bible, the granite basis of all truth. Dr. Iglehart's page has something of interest for every member of the family. Not only big news of world-wide interest, but the smaller, homely, touching, inspiring incidents of life are here depicted and related to the Bible message. Each story leads to a Bible illustration, relating divine providence to the practical affairs of men.

The Temptation; Jesus Rejected at Nazareth.

AND [a] Jesus being full of the [b] Holy Ghost returned from Jordan, and [b] was led by the Spirit into the wilderness,

2 Being forty days [c] tempted of the devil. And [d] in those days he did eat nothing: and when they were ended, he afterward hungered.

3 And the devil said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread.

4 And Jesus answered him, saying, [e] It is written, That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God.

5 And the devil, taking him up into a high mountain, shewed unto him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time.

6 And the devil said unto him, All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them: for [f] that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it.

7 If thou therefore wilt [1] worship me, all shall be thine.

8 And Jesus answered and said unto him, Get thee behind me, Satan: [g] for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.

9 And [h] he brought him to Jerusalem, and set him on a pinnacle of the temple, and said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, [i] cast thyself down from hence:

10 For [j] it is written, He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee:

11 And in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.

12 And Jesus answering said unto him, [k] It is said, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

13 And when the devil had ended all the temptation, he [l] departed from him [m] for a season.

14 ¶ And [n] Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into [o] Galilee: and there went out a fame of him through all the region round about.

15 And he taught in their synagogues, being [p] glorified of all.

16 ¶ And he came to [q] Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, [r] he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read.

17 And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias. And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written,

18 The [s] Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised,

19 To preach the [t] acceptable year of the Lord.

20 And he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on him.

21 And he began to say unto them, This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears.

22 And all bare him witness, and [u] wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth. And they said, [v] Is not this Joseph's son?

23 And he said unto them, Ye will surely say unto me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself: whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in [w] thy country.

24 And he said. Verily I say unto you, No prophet is accepted in his own country.

25 But I tell you of a truth, many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land;

26 But unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a [x] city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow.

Our Red Letter Bible (ONLY GENUINE EDITION)

The only genuine edition of the Red Letter Bible is the Authorized or King James Version, unchanged save for the variation of the color in the type. Two colors (Red and Black) are employed, in accordance with the simple plan devised by the late Dr. Louis Klopsch, the Originator of the Red Letter principle applied to the Holy Scriptures.

What Is a Red Letter Bible?

1. In the Old Testament, the passages quoted by our Lord, or directly related to incidents to which he referred, are Printed in Red.
2. In the New Testament, the words universally accepted as those of the Saviour are Printed in Red.
3. A Red Star (★) immediately following a verse in the Old Testament indicates that the verse embodies a prophetic reference to Christ as the coming Messiah.

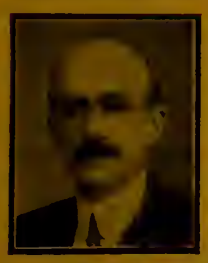
Young People's Church Societies



A. H. Howland, B.D.

DURING the coming year THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will continue to present each week up-to-date, practical, spiritual notes on the Christian Endeavor, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union topics. The subjects will be fully discussed and illustrated with new anecdotes, specially applicable to the lessons in each case. This department will be conducted by A. H. Howland and other writers thoroughly familiar with the work and its needs. The lessons will appear regularly ten days in advance of the date on which they are to be used, thus affording ample opportunity for leaders and workers to familiarize themselves with the contents, and especially with the anecdotal illustrations—a most valuable feature of the department. All the society members will find these studies of great value.

Over 200 Missionary Correspondents

Rev. A. B. Simpson

EVERY year adds to the number of missionary correspondents. There is to-day hardly a country under the sun where THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has not its missionary representatives. The contributions of these correspondents are instinct with the life of the movement at the front, and give such a picture of Gospel activities as can be found in no other publication. Every denomination is represented, and their letters will be continued during the new year and will be illustrated with photographs taken by the missionaries themselves. These missionary messages are not dull statistical reports, but live, bright, thrilling narratives of occurrences on the outposts of the Gospel army, full of real human interest and spiritual fervor, making the foreign field and its work vividly real.

The Fundamentals of the Faith

WE DESIRE particularly to call our readers' attention to The Fundamentals. They are the ablest, wisest, clearest and most convincing exposition of the foundation truths of the Christian faith that has ever been prepared by consecrated modern scholarship. They deal with vital facts in the history, doctrine and development of the Christian Church, and represent the belief of that church to-day in clear and simple language. These ten little volumes are the equivalent of a whole library, a spiritual armament for the defense of the faith, and are priceless to Bible students.

WE WILL SEND The Fundamentals with any yearly subscription, new or renewal, for $2.20

The Little Angel of the Mountains

This is the title of a story by Cyrus Townsend Brady, the first instalment of which will be published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD very shortly. The theme centers round the life of an orphan boy who, straying into a mining camp, falls a prey to all the recklessness of the life therein. Afterwards rising superior to the forces of evil, he succeeded in bringing about the reclamation of the whole community. It is full of the thrilling interest of frontier life and the battles which rage amid pioneer surroundings between the forces of good and evil.

Aunt Samantha Will Write

Marietta Holley's short talks on homely subjects, which are always bright and entertaining, will be continued. Dear old Aunt Samantha has a quaint humor of her own, and her amusing recitals of household experiences with Josiah are full of human interest. It has been said of Samantha, "If she were simply funny, it would be good, but a bushel of wisdom comes with every shaft of her wit." As Josiah Allen's wife her fame has gone round the world and our readers have always welcomed her delightful sketches.

Fanny Crosby

Both Sides of the Suffrage Question

The right of woman to vote has been the subject of more activity on the part of suffragists and anti-suffragists during the past year than ever before. Both sides of the woman-suffrage question will be discussed in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by leaders for and against the right of women to vote.

Mrs. Arthur Dodge
Anti-Suffragist

Morals and the Government

This will be an article showing how Uncle Sam is going out of his way to look after the well-being of his people. Time was when the men of the mining camps ran away to the nearest town on pay day and spent their money in riotous living. So Uncle Sam has introduced moving picture shows, lecturers, and Y. M. C. A. workers into the camps to induce the men to stay. And the plan has succeeded wonderfully, as will be shown.

The Young Man's Chance Today

How to Enrich Your Own Farm

Whether you live in the promised land or on an abandoned farm back East, the Agricultural Department stands ready to help you make two blades of grass grow where only one grows now. It will test your soil and tell you just how and what to do with it, the kind of crops to grow and how they should best be marketed. It will even instruct you in efficiency methods so that you may save money in your operations. It will even show you how to do the farm bookkeeping. An interesting article for country readers.

The Far Western Land of Promise

This is what the desert regions of the West are called by the men of the United States Reclamation Service—those hardy engineers who are hurrying forward the great irrigation projects which are expected to make fertile farms of land now given up to cactus. We will shortly publish an article telling how the average citizen may acquire a part of these lands and ultimately build a home of his own.

Cheap Fish for the Million

Time was when the United States Fish Commission was concerned in enriching science with a knowledge of the species and habits of fish.

This is now being put to practical use, and whether you live on the sea coast or on the banks of interior lakes and streams, you will be interested in learning how your own supply of fish can be increased at less cost than before.

Saving Life in the Mines

Loss of life in mines is becoming less frequent since the government has installed eight rescue cars standing ready equipped with a crew fitted with oxygen helmets and ready to speed at a moment's notice to the scene of the explosion. The whole story is one of romance and heroism combined to help prolong the lives of the underground toilers.

Civilizing the Alaskan Indian

The Alaskan Indian who used to be a fisherman is, with the help of the government, gradually taking up the work of the soil, thereby adding to his own prosperity and, incidentally, that of the country. How this transition to the pastoral state is being accomplished and how the Indian woman is vitally concerned in it will form the subject matter of a fascinating article.

Home Education for Children

Uncle Sam maintains a special department for the purpose of helping parents in the management of their children until they have reached school age. This advice pertains to general management, clothing, the kind of games to be played, etc., etc. This article will be eagerly awaited by every CHRISTIAN HERALD parent.

The Government and Telephones

In Europe various governments own and operate the public telephone systems. Such ownership is now being advocated in this country. Experts in Washington are striving to show that if the telephone systems were run by the government the people would save a large amount of money. We shall publish a series on this subject shortly.

Making Radium in Colorado

It now seems that all the radium produced in Europe has been extracted from ores mined in the United States. It has been arranged with governmental help to make the production of radium a home industry, the product to be used in two great hospitals for the cure of diseases for which radium is beneficial. With radium placed within comparatively easy reach of the experimenter, much practical good may be accomplished in the cure of disease. It will make a fascinating article.

New Plants Under Old Names

Here is a new industry which Uncle Sam is trying to put out of business. Hay seed, asparagus beans and other seed are being sold at high as $15 a bushel under new names, and the most extravagant claims made as to their productiveness. Farmers ought to know that the Department of Agriculture stands ready to advise them as to the quality of seed offered for sale by any dealer. And it is better to have this advice before waiting until the crop is a failure and it is too late to replant.

William B. Wilson
Secretary of Labor

Selling Health by Mail

Uncle Sam warns us that quite an industry has sprung up, operated by men, some of them misguided, the most of them plain charlatans, who undertake to cure you of any ill through diet regulation. As these men do not undertake to sell medicine but merely advice, it is impossible for the government to prosecute them. Uncle Sam is doing all he can to put them out of business, however, by spreading broadcast advice of his own experts, which shows the fallacy of trying to treat yourself for diseases which you may not have. This advice will be published in an early issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

John Wanamaker
Eminent Merchant

Using the Entomological Bureau

Here is a subject that will interest every farmer. The government is doing wonderful work in suppressing the insect enemies of the farmer, and above all desires the intelligent co-operation of the farmer himself. What the government is doing and how you can help it to help you will be described by an expert of the Entomological Bureau.

Dr. L. O. Howard
Entomological Bureau

The above are only a few of the articles describing the great work Uncle Sam is doing for his people, which will be published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Roosevelt's Varying Reception

ONLY one of our South American neighbors seems disinclined to accord Colonel Roosevelt the whole-hearted welcome with which he is greeted elsewhere. The republic of Colombia is reported to have issued orders to its officials throughout South American states to refrain from taking part in receptions to our distinguished traveler. The press published unfriendly comments and cartoons, all centering on the Panama "incident." The greatest of interest is taken Colonel Roosevelt by others, prompted not only by his fame and personality, by the desire which exists in those southern countries to express their friendship for America. Mrs. Roosevelt has started home via Panama, being given a trip of inspection on the Canal en route. Our picture shows Argentine officials greeting Colonel Roosevelt on his arrival in Buenos Aires.

Sir John Willison, editor Toronto News, declared Canada would stand by this country any genuine trouble.

Naval Holiday Gains Ground

THE declaration by Winston Churchill, first lord of the British admiralty, that Great Britain was willing to co-operate with other governments to secure a one year's cessation of naval construction, has prompted a resolution in the House of Representatives which received an almost unanimous vote, calling on the President to use his influence to consummate such an arrangement for this country. It is believed that this novel proposal will not be feasible until there is wide concurrence of first-class Powers. Meanwhile, the extensive program of Secretary Daniels for the present enlargement of our navy will receive the attention of Congress. The movement, however, bids fair to become international, and it is hailed as a great advance in the direction of universal peace.

Will They Exhibit?

MANUFACTURING interests of Germany and the government are not in accord on the subject of representation at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Three-fifths of the majority of the Reichstag are said to have signed a petition praying for the passage of the bill, appropriating $500,000 for official participation in the exposition; it is stated that the government will not support this bill, in which case it is doomed. The animus in the government's attitude is found in the wish of a group of under-officials who originally recommended this boycott of the exposition to "save their faces." It is understood that the attitude of the British Government depends very largely on Germany's actions. Big exhibits are being prepared by the representatives of the French Government.

Great Dublin Strike Over

ON DECEMBER 9 the labor war in Dublin, which had lasted over three months, was practically ended. This was a general strike, and more than one hundred thousand men, women and children were thrown on charity. The port of Dublin was closed except for passenger traffic, and thousands of wage earners were idle. Efforts were made to induce the Trades Union Council, London, to order a sympathetic strike of all trade unionists in the British Isles. The effort failed, and the same day the dock and transport workers agreed to resume work. Factories will remain closed until normal conditions are re-established at the port. Although the American press has contained very little about this disorder, it was one of the gravest that the English Government has faced, and it will be many months before industry will recover.

Panama Hero Dies

LIEUTENANT COLONEL DAVID DUBOSE GAILLARD, U. S. A., who deserves the title of hero because of his self-sacrificing work on the Panama Canal, died at Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, December 5. Colonel Gaillard was taken to the hospital in August suffering from tumor in the brain, the result of seven years' unremitting labor in the trying climate of the Canal Zone. Colonel Gaillard was chiefly in charge of the excavating about the Culebra Cut and the Gatun Dam. His task was a stupendous one in that he had to overcome the great slides which caused such delays from time to time. He is credited with having saved the government $11,000,000 by giving personal attention to all the details of his department, and it was the long and nervous strain combined with the climatic conditions that ruined his health. It is said of him that he did not know how to rest. "The landslides were with him night and day." "He has given the world an admirable example of self-abnegation and absolute devotion to duty." He did not have the satisfaction of knowing that his skill and toil had triumphed over the natural enemies of the Canal, but his name will be placed high on the roll of the nation's heroes.

Balkan Relief Fund

THERE is still much suffering in the Balkans. A letter from Chairman Furnajieff of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Committee, dated Sofia, November 26, says: "The CHRISTIAN HERALD check for $1,300 has just been cashed. Our work is most needy at present. Refugees are sleeping on the bare floors with hardly anything to cover themselves. Your latest aid will relieve and is already relieving scores. There are many sick, and their need is clothing, fuel, and food. Mortality among the children is frightful. My door is a daily witness of sufferings and tears. These sufferers are mostly non-combatants and bear the sins of others."

Explorers in Hard Luck

THE expedition headed by the famous explorer Vilhjalmur Stefansson, which sailed from Victoria ,B. C., on June 17 to explore the regions bordering on the North Pole and map the unknown continent believed to exist there, has been delayed in Alaska by weather conditions. Word has been received that in September the expedition's ship, the Karluk, with twenty-five men aboard, and provisioned for three to four years, was carried away by drift ice and wind, while the explorer and others of the party were on a hunting expedition inland. The ship was thought to be in no serious danger, and the land party expected to proceed by sled northward and establish a base for future operations, then return to the coast for the winter in hopes that the Karluk would return. The scientific work of this expedition is looked forward to as likely to add definitely to the geography of that region.

Starving Saves Mrs. Pankhurst

PROMPTLY upon her arrival in England from this country Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst was arrested, and as promptly began her famous hunger and thirst strike. Intense excitement and indignation were caused among the militant suffragettes of England, and Mrs. Pankhurst's condition was such that the Bishop of Marlborough permitted special prayers to be offered for her in the cathedral. The suffragettes made many public demonstrations in protest against Mrs Pankhurst's detention, and after her release on a seven-day license, swore that never again would the government get their leader into custody, even though they faced battleships to keep her free. That seemed almost prophetic, as Mrs. Pankhurst immediately left London for Paris to join her daughter, and it is said that she will there go into voluntary exile.

Two Gentle Missionaries Go to Jolo

THE little island of Jolo in the Philippines is one of the worst places in the world, according to Police Commissioner Waldo of New York. He is quoted as saying that he has been there and knows that the natives are little better than cannibals. They are a race of fierce brown pirates, chiefly distinguished by hatred for Americans. Moved to believe that love manifested in practical ways will prove stronger than hatred, two women of culture, Mrs. Lorillard Spencer and Miss Virginia Young, sailed recently from New York to go together to Jolo and woo the natives to civilization by starting a kindergarten for children, teaching mothers hygiene, and establishing a little community of welfare workers. Mrs. Spencer is an experienced settlement worker, and a teacher of a Bible class in St. George's Church. She has planned this missionary expedition against the protests of her friends. She and Miss Young are inclined to discount the stories about Jolo, and declare themselves not a bit afraid, and convinced that they will start a great work.

A City Without Water

THE breaking of a huge main on December 9 precipitated a water famine in Cincinnati, Ohio, which lasted several days. It was necessary to close schools and factories, sixty thousand hands being temporarily thrown out of work. Because of the appalling fire hazard caused by the situation, the automobile chemical engines of the city were mobilized, ready for any emergency; the only water available for fire fighting would not have lasted an hour. Even hospitals were almost destitute, and every interest suffered. Normal conditions are now re-established.

GENERAL PANCHO VILLA, WHO EXECUTES ALL FEDERAL OFFICERS CAPTURED

ON DECEMBER 4 it was reported that General Villa, flushed by successive victories and the seeming demoralization of the Federal forces in the north of Mexico, and better equipped by great quantities of captured arms and ammunition, planned a sweeping advance upon the capital. First, however, he turned his attention to trying to overtake the Federal sympathizers flying across the wastes of Chihuahua to the border, carrying immense treasure.

This great caravan, miles long, discarding its valued possessions as it fled, escorted, in a way, by the Federal soldiers who abandoned the city, is one of the most striking incidents of this war. The several thousand refugees began to pour into Ojinaga, a border town opposite Presidio, Texas, on December 7, and the soldiers prepared to defend the place against Villa's pursuing army.

The press reports of December 5 gave scant news but many conjectures, and announced that Villa delayed entering the city of Chihuahua, fearing that by a trick the Federals would isolate him there as they before had been by the rebels. It was said that Huerta had negotiated a large loan, and that his family was secreted in Vera Cruz. December 6 and 7 brought no more important news than that Huerta had given orders to protect lives and property of all aliens in case of fighting at the capital. Mexico City was seemingly indifferent to the course of events. Villa still prowled about Chihuahua City, like a wolf investigating a strange shack in the woods.

On December 9 the Mexican Congress annulled the recent election and declared Huerta president ad interim, pending a ne election called for the first Sunday in July, 1914, showing that the Mexica are not without a certain grim humor. This move was taken to indicate th Huerta really expects trouble—or courts it. Villa is reported to be moving Ojinaga with the pick of his fighting men, when he hopes to capture the on Federal troops remaining in the north. Later reports stated that the rebe to the south were threatening to attack Tampico at any moment, and Admir Fletcher took steps to receive aboard his vessels such foreigners as mig seek his protection.

December 10 it was stated that the conservative element in the Mexic Government had taken tentative steps toward making a truce with Carranz Tampico was attacked at eleven o'clock on the morning of December 10 l large bands of rebels; these attacks were repulsed. Desultory fighting w reported at various other points in the South. Several of the battleshi which have been off Vera Cruz left for Tampico. An engagement at Ojina was imminent. The rebel or Constitutionalist army is reported to be recruiti numbers of Yaqui Indians in the State of Sonora, and Federals were forci Mexican laborers into their ranks.

The press of December 11 reported Tampico as under assault, the Federa making their stand at the city limits. Torreon, a strategic military positi commanding the gateway both to north and south, was recaptured by t Federals. Communication with these places was unreliable. From El Pas Texas, came details of a rebel raid on the British vice-consulate in Chihuah City and execution of the son of General Terrazas, Mexico's wealthiest ma who fled with the caravan carrying 5,000,000 pesos ($2,500,000). Reb troops not sighted at Ojinaga. Washington is still serenely watchful.

GOD'S GIFT TO THE WORLD

to-day. Look at the marvelous changes in the Orient. The new Chinese Republic, the greatest political and moral wonder of the age, is the result of the work of Christian missionaries. The same is true of the new Japan and the new India. Africa, with her 170,000,000 of people steeped in Satanic sorcery and superstition, is stretching out her hands toward God, and is being intersected with railroads and schools and Christian missions. Christ is winning some of his grandest victories in New Zealand and Australia. Nearly all the islands of the Pacific have shaken off the shackles of heathenism and placed themselves under the beneficent rule of the Prince of Peace.

The fraternal and commercial relations now established between the great political powers of the globe, the beautiful Red Cross work in time of war, the Hague tribunal for the abolition of war and the adjustment of all international difficulties by arbitration, the homes and hospitals for the aged and helpless, the training and care of children, the effort for the abolition of child labor, the emancipation of woman, the regnant conscience that is being transfused into business and education, the general and indignant protest of the people against corrupt municipal and State government, these are evidences of the irresistible progress of the Christian religion, and the advancement of Christianity is convincing proof that the Son of God is come and has stamped himself indelibly on the thought and heart and life of the world.

The personal character of Christ is further confirmation that the Son of God is come. The moral and spiritual excellence of his life has never been paralleled in any age. His wisdom, his purity, his self-denial, his self-control, his courage, his magnanimity, his independence of the customs and teachings of his age, his immensurable superiority to all the saints and philosophers and sages that preceded and followed him, these characteristics give Jesus Christ a unique place among the sons of men. Jean Paul Richter expresses the truth in one of his unforgettable epigrams. "He is the mightiest among the holy, and the holiest among the mighty."

Napoleon said: "I know men, and I tell you Jesus Christ was not a man. Superficial minds see a resemblance between Christ and the founders of empires and the gods of other religions. That resemblance does not exist. There is between Christianity and other religions the distance of infinity. Alexander, Cæsar, myself and others founded empires, but on what did we rest the creations of our genius? Upon sheer force. Jesus Christ alone founded his empire on love, and at this hour millions of men would die for him. In every other existence but that of Christ how many imperfections! From the first day till the last, he is the same: majestic and simple, infinitely firm and infinitely gentle."

Indeed he was the only perfect man. The most rigid analysis of friends and enemies has failed to discover the smallest flaw or infirmity or moral stain in his life. No genius in literature could create such a character, much less common men like the four evangelists. It is therefore impossible to account for the Son of God except on the theory that he actually lived on earth, that the Gospels are not beautiful fiction, charming and magnificent lies, as the rationalists would have us believe, but as veritable history as was ever penned. Such a character, matchless in its moral splendor and influence, is the most unanswerable evidence that Jesus Christ the Son of God came into this world. No stronger proof of his deity could be furnished. The demonstration is sufficient to satisfy every honest intellect.

The last proof to which I will now allude is found in the experience of his disciples. The loyal followers of the Christ have been happy in every age. They have come from all the ranks of life. They have been taken from all latitudes, from all nations, and from all the tribes of men. Many have bee favored with great worldly prosperity; others hav passed through the fire of terrible persecutions; bu they have been comforted in all their sufferin strengthened for their arduous toil, and beautifull sustained through the multiform perplexities, irr tations, and bereavements of life. They felt an still feel the presence of the Son of God in the dark est nights as well as in the brightest days. He ha ever been their unfailing portion under pressur of adversity and in excruciating pain. Others re sort to suicide and the intoxicating cup; the dis ciples of Jesus endure their trials with unquestior ing submission to the will of God and never doub that when this life ends they will begin the perfec life above, and be rewarded with "the far mor exceeding and eternal weight of glory." They know that the divine Father takes a thousand more pain with them than the artist with his picture and "b many touches of sorrow and by many colors of cir cumstance brings them into the form which is th highest and noblest in his sight if only they receiv his gifts in the right spirit." How often the Hol Spirit whispers in their hearts the words of th prophet Isaiah: "Behold, I have refined thee, bu not with silver; I have chosen thee in the furnace o affliction." (Isa. 48: 10.)

> Be patient, suffering soul, I hear thy cry;
> The trial fires may glow, but I am nigh.
> I see the silver and I will refine
> Until my image shall upon it shine.
> Fear not, for I am near, thy help to be;
> Greater than all thy pain, my love for thee.

No class of people are so contented and secure a the consecrated followers of the Son of God. These are some of the evidences that he is come. Let us rejoice in his character and work, in the steady progress of his truth, in the ultimate triumph and eternal reign of holiness, and not forget that to those who look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.

FOLLOWING THE STAR

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

THE camels traveled wearily over the desert places, following the star, and the shepherds came in from the hills as they hurried in the wake of a heavenly light. For it led to a manger, and a Holy Child. And there in the dimness of the stable they knelt and anked God; wise men and fools, rich men and or. . . . Christmas Day dawned over the land, id angel songs broke the stillness of a perfect ace.

Sweetly, peacefully a star gleams in the sky of r life. Some call it Ambition, some call it Faith, me call it Peace. But some call it Love.

Shall I tell you the story of a star?

Long, long ago there lived a man in a strange and reign country. He was a queer man, a silent man, unhappy man who dwelt by himself in a little hite house on the outskirts of a deep wood. No- dy loved him, for nobody knew him; but folk spected him, for they said that he had much oney stored away in plump canvas sacks.

The man did have money, money that he loved ore than anything else, money that he could not eam of spending. Deep in the darkness of the nvas bags it lay away—worthless, unused.

There buried from the rest of the world the man rgot the length of days and weeks and months. nd so it came about that he awoke one cold winter ight and wondered in his soul why a blinding radi- nce filled the room. Stealthily he crept to the indow and peered out, and there, in the dark of ie sky, he saw a star shining. And as he looked e heard a voice say softly:

"I am the Star of Light—follow me! Too long ave you worshiped the gleam of your gold."

So the man arose, and gathering together his iser's wealth, he followed the gleaming sign. And ie star led him out of the woods and into the town -the poor, unhappy, squalid little town.

All night long the man wandered through evil- melling, dingy streets, and always at the murmur f the gentle voice he left money from his store; to rphans and widows, and to friendless, discouraged ien, and always as his golden wealth diminished the ght of the star grew.

Finally the gold was all spent and the miser urned his steps toward the house of a man of God rho dwelt near by. And when he stood before the enevolent old eyes he told his story.

"My gold is gone," he said, "the pride of my life! I have given it to the poor who have nothing. And I am happy—happy for the first time in many years."

The man of God started very slightly, but a radiant smile shone in his eyes.

"Why," he asked in his kind voice, "why did you do this thing?"

Eagerly the man pointed to the heavens.

A SONG OF CHRISTMAS

MISTLETOE and holly berries,
Shining skies and frosty air,
Yule logs blazing on the hearthstone,
Folk without a heavy care.
Sleigh bells ringing in the meadow,
As they cut across the snow;
Christmas joy and hearts triumphant—
Holly wreaths and mistletoe.

Anxious prayers and stockings tiny,
Hanging in the cold of day,
Sleigh bells ringing on the pathway,
Sounding mighty far away.
Nothing very nice for eating;
(Can it be nobody cares
For the small, forgotten children?)
Stockings thin and tiny prayers.

Shining star and angel voices,
Singing in the early dawn,
Telling to the waiting people
That the Lord of all is born.
Sighs and tears and happy murmurs,
Through the ages travel far.
Ah! there is a God above us!
Angel song and shining star.

M. E. S., JR.

"See," he cried, "the Star! It was the star that told me what to do—that guided me, that helped me over the path."

But this listener was smiling softly, incredulously.

"Man," he said slowly, "the sky is dark! It was your soul that guided you."

And the one-time miser knew deep in his brain that the holy man was right. For the brightest star of life is in the soul.

So he went back to his house in the woods; and he opened his heart to the people; and he taught them—and loved them. And all his life the golden glory of happiness never left him.

Shall I tell of another star?

A girl was going Christmas shopping in one of the largest, most expensive stores in the city. She was going to buy a diamond pin for her sister (who had many diamond pins) and a set of books for her brother, and dozens of expensive trifles for her friends. But as she stepped from her car at the door she almost fell over a tiny ragged little boy who stood sobbing on the pavement.

"What is the matter?" asked the girl solicitously as she bent over the child. She was not acquainted with grief.

Mournfully the little boy gazed at her.

"Huh!" he muttered, "don't you know? It's nearly Christmas, an' there ain't no presents, an' no Santa Claus, an' no nothin'. Th' ain't even a tree!"

This gave the girl something solid to think about. She thought for several days—thought hard.

Sister never saw the diamond pin on Christmas morning (she did not really miss it), and brother never knew that he would have had a set of books. Many friends received one less present out of their over-abundance. But down in a narrow, crooked part of the city there were Christmas dinners, and presents, and "Santy Clauses," where there had never before been any joy or gladness. And many hearts blessed a young lady who had followed her star.

Christmas time is here, with bracing winter weather, and happiness and good feeling. Holly is made into wreaths, and the Yule log is blazing in the open fireplace. Pine trees, straight and green and proud, are brought in from the forest, decked with tinsel, and colored balls, and glittering angels. Mistletoe, a glory of white berries and green leaves, hangs temptingly in the corners. Christmas is here!

But while the crowds are dancing on joyous feet, and while the carols are ringing out on the frosty air, perhaps there is a baby dying—a baby with the eyes of the Christ Child.

The star is waiting to lead us as it waited for the wise men and the shepherds. It is entreating us to help. For some people call it the star of Love.

"JESUS IS HERE!"

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

The Author of "In His Steps," Etc., Etc.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

Heralded by a marvelous light in the sky, which was seen by many, Jesus has come to Raymond, the scene of the story In His Steps. Popular excitement runs high, and extends throughout the country, skepticism being uppermost. Jasper Carter, editor of the Raymond Gazette, fails in an astonishing way to get either a sensational story or a photograph, as do also the other newspaper men, who come from other cities. Carter's star reporter, Barnes, accepts the reality of Jesus, and has a serious break with his employer. Jesus calls to see the editor, and leaves with him a remarkable manuscript. Jesus comforts Mrs. Page, whose little daughter dies, but does not bring the child back to life. He addresses an audience in First Church, an audience at the State university and again a great audience at the church. Virginia Page and Mr. Stanton, assistant to Mr. Maxwell, the pastor of First Church, have been strongly attracted to each other. In a riot of the crowd near the church Stanton protects Virginia from harm. Jesus appears on the church steps and quiets the mob. Some days later he leaves Raymond for the East. Virginia and Stanton announce their engagement. In the Gazette office Barnes and Carter are discussing the personality of Jesus when despatches arrive announcing the appearance of Jesus in New York and describing a remarkable conference he held with the clergy. Carter soon after leaves Raymond to attend a convention at New York. Virginia and Stanton are married, and go East for their wedding journey. In New York they find themselves in a dense crowd near the Subtreasury Building, and see Jesus standing beside the statue of Washington, in his arms a little girl grasping a wreath of artificial flowers. Jesus speaks to the multitude, his words searching out the sore spots in industrialism. A startling conviction seizes one man, who rushes up to Jesus.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

Continuation of the Letter of Richard Stanton

"THE crowd gave way as Jesus came, silent and apparently oblivious of the multitude. But as he was passing Virginia and me, he paused and, in a tone that I am sure none heard but ourselves, asked us to come and see him to-night.

"Then we saw Jesus passing slowly through the multitude, the man who had cried out going with him, until, together, Jesus, the little girl and the man passed down the street and out of our sight.

"Slowly the great crowd dissolved. It was noticeable how subdued men's voices were, how deeply smitten they had been in heart and mind. Somehow I could not help asking myself whether the 'transactions' in Wall Street that afternoon would be just the same as they had been through the years.

"It has not been easy to describe what the effect was of His presence and his message. I have been able to convey to you only a hint of what it all was.

"We are anticipating with keenest interest our meeting with him to-night. No one in New York has known of his address. We gather from the address he gave us it must be in the great East Side tenement district.

"The scene this afternoon must be only the beginning of gigantic events to follow. All men seemed to feel the premonition of it. Hundreds of men in that gathering this afternoon must have been stirred to deepest anger, if they were not, like this Clay Ross, convicted of deepest selfishness and heart sin. And when once one begins to hate Jesus, history shows that to be as deep and relentless a passion as when love for him makes one ready to die for him. To what will it all tend? Money-loving New York will not endure even Jesus, if his teaching shall tend to the destruction of its old-time principles of money-getting. But it may be that, after all these years of Christianity, there is enough leaven in the lump, even here, to change and reconstruct financial society and rebuild it on the foundation of brotherhood. The most fundamental things will follow what Jesus may do within the next few days.

"You may look for another letter to-morrow after our visit with him to-night. It seems incredible—it is—to think of our actually going to see Jesus in the flesh.

"Perhaps he will—but we speculate on his future plans. Only we know all things are in his hands, and the world he came to redeem so long ago will be redeemed by him; of that we feel certain.

"We both send love to you, in Jesus' blessed name.

"Affectionately,

"RICHARD STANTON."

The morning following the Stantons' visit to Jesus, they both wrote again of their experiences. Virginia's letter to Rachel will perhaps even better than her husband's describe the remarkable evening they spent with Jesus in the East Side tenement.

[Letter from Mrs. Richard Stanton to her old friend Mrs. Rollin Page after an interview with Jesus in New York on the evening following the now historic scene in Wall Street.]

"DEAR RACHEL: I do not know whether I can in any real way describe the visit Richard and I had with Jesus last night following the great scene in Wall Street about which I wrote you yesterday. It is all so amazing—this meeting with him—that we seem to be living in a dream.

"Only, as I read the papers this morning, I realized how wonderful a fact it all is. All New York is stirred to its depths. Every one acknowledges that this person is Jesus. The Planet declares his presence to be the greatest event historically of any since the creation. The Echo can find no parallel to his appearance, and says no one can predict the tremendous changes that may be made due to his appearance and preaching. The Bulletin declares his message yesterday in Wall Street was revolutionary and may lead to the most fundamental upheavals in financial methods. The Leader in an editorial that covers the front page announces a new standard of life has appeared, or rather a new emphasis on the old standard, and predicts any number of radical redemptive forces to be set at work.

JESUS THE CHILDREN'S SHEPHERD*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

WE ARE beginning this year's study of the life of Christ not with his birth but with his ministry in Perea, which was divided into two parts by his visit to Jerusalem at the Feast of Dedication. The Perean ministry was ended only six days before his crucifixion, when he came to Bethany and was anointed by Mary. Perea is a province of Palestine on the east side of the Jordan River and the Dead Sea. It is an elevated plateau, a mountainous district, and was chiefly devoted to pasturage, so that the people were mostly shepherds. Jesus inaugurated his Perean ministry by sending out seventy heralds two by two.

Jesus' ministry in Galilee had been pre-eminently filled with works of healing; his Perean ministry was marked by teaching, his greatest parables and discourses being given there.

One of the best loved portions of the Bible is the story of Christ blessing little children. The scene is one of the choicest subjects of art. Some of our most beautiful pictures have been painted of it. That act gave children the right to become the followers of Jesus, and also presented to them the duty of loving and serving him. The loving mothers knew that the loving heart of Jesus was in accord with the child hearts, and so they brought their little ones to him. But there were men near who did not have the father heart in them—some of them even the disciples of Jesus. They rebuked the mothers for bringing their little ones to Jesus, notwithstanding the fact that he had, only a very short time before, given them a lesson about the significance of childhood. He had taken a child in his arms and said, by way of correcting in the grown people about him the spirit of self-seeking: "Whosoever shall humble himself as this little child, the same is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 18: 4.) Jesus was "much displeased" when he heard the apostles rebuking the mothers (Mark 10: 14), for they had so quickly forgotten what he had said: "Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea."

There are people to-day—good people—who are hindering children from taking their rightful places among the followers of Jesus. They say: "Oh, they are too young to join the church, they can't understand it." Hear a child's answer: "I don't understand all there is in the catechism, but I do understand to love Jesus." Statistics show that more people now in the churches joined them between sixteen and eighteen years of age than during any other three-year period of life, and this has led some students of adolescence to suppose that no effort should be made to develop a religious life until then. But these same statistics carefully examined show that twelve is the age when religious interest began in the most numerous cases.

How many scholars in your Sunday school, who are twelve years of age, are members of the church? Very few. They are the exception, and yet the boy Jesus, when he was twelve years of age, joined the church by becoming "the son of the law," according to the Jewish custom. All boys should be the same kind of a boy that he was, and girls, too, should be like him as he grew in favor with God and man, "for the grace of God was upon him." (Luke 2: 40.) But no boy nor girl should be held back from joining the church until twelve years of age, for the little ones whom Jesus gathered in his arms were certainly much younger than that.

A railroad man, whose duties called him away from home nearly three-fourths of the time, whenever he was about to start for home, used to telegraph his wife, apprising her of the fact. In these telegrams he never failed to mention the name of his little four-year-old, and the despatches usually ran as follows: "Tell Arthur I shall sleep with him to-night." The baby boy was very proud of these telegrams, which his mother would read over to him, and he considered the "teledraf" a great institution. Sickness came to the boy, and when the fever had done its work and the mother was sobbing out her anguish, the little one turned calmly in his bed and said: "Don't try, mamma; I s'all s'eep wiv Dod, you know. Send Dod a teledraf and tell him I s'all s'eep wiv him to-night." But the message went straight up there without the clicking of wires.

Sunday school teachers should help children of all ages to become members of the church; a church should delight to increase its roll of child members; every scholar should be urged to attend church, where places are provided for them to sit if their parents do not attend. The pastor should frequently come into the Sunday school, and by a greeting at the door rather than among the classes (for fear of disturbing) he should invite the boys and girls to come to church. To know that their pastor wants to see them in the church and expects to see them there will go a long way toward getting them to go.

Recently we had the pleasure of visiting the well-known Sunday school of Mr. Frank L. Brown in Brooklyn, N. Y. It is a Sunday school that numbers three thousand scholars, and is divided into departments according to ages. At the close of Sunday school the teachers of each department gathered for fifteen minute prayer meetings in which scholars were mentioned by name for whom prayers were asked that they might decide to become Christians. Also the families to which scholars belonged were prayed for.

It is a serious matter that both in Great Britain and in the United States there has been a recent falling off in some denominations in the membership of the Sunday school. Let CHRISTIAN HERALD readers investigate the statistics of their own denominations and see how the matter stands. In the United States, according to a statement made by the International Sunday School Association in 1912, there were 13,000,000 under twenty years of age in the Sunday school, and 23,000,000 outside. But it is a fact that the United States has nearly half of the membership of the Sunday schools of the world. The fact remains that we have much less than half of the children of the United States in our Sunday schools and a very small minority attending church.

Psychology, applied to religious training, is a new treatment of habit. Wrongdoing makes broad trunk lines across the brain; so does rightdoing. These are strong arguments why early Christian training should lay the road for the trunk lines of a virtuous life, thus making it hard to do evil and easy to do right. Psychology gives new force to the text: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and he will not depart from it. Woodrow Wilson before he became President, in addressing students, said: "There is a very fine passage in one of Ruskin's writings, in which he says he has no patience with the thoughtlessness of youth. That is the very time when you can't afford to be thoughtless, because if you are you will not establish any direction or momentum, you won't know where you are bound for or how you are going to get there. This is the particular part of your career in which you must be alive and thoughtful, determining what your course is to be; and every day you affirm or destroy your choice."

A mother was wont to say at evening when her children were young: "Father, are the children all in?" In her old age, when she was dying, and her grown children had all been able to gather in her sick-room, as often happens, there came to her as her vision faded, and even her mind lost account of things at hand, memories of earlier years, and she said, as she was about to pass on to heaven, "Father, are the children all in?" As all of the children had been gathered into the divine household through her prayers, there was double significance in the father's answer, "Yes, mother."

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—PLEASE SEND ME advice about how to organize Sunday schools in the new West.—T. N. H., Saskatchewan.

Send postal card invitations to all in the vicinity, also put up large posters announcing the event. If you cannot afford both, choose the post cards. Organize the owners of carriages or wagons into a "Get-Together Brigade" to bring in those who live at a distance. If there is a town hall, select that for the first place of meeting, or the schoolhouse. Secure a band that shall march through the streets playing familiar church hymns. For a few weeks conduct the Sunday school as a union service. Enlist the different pastors as helpers, and let each one be invited to take five minutes each in the program. Another way to organize Sunday schools is to form neighborhood groups to meet in different homes by turn. These need not always meet on Sundays, but it would seem to be the best time.

—CAN YOU TELL me whether or not the proceedings and addresses of the Zurich World's Sunday School Conference are in book form?—I. L., Elizabeth City, N. C.

A complete report of the World's Seventh Sunday School Convention has not been prepared upon the completion of the World's Committee. Mr. Charles G. Trumbull, of the Sunday School Times Company, has been appointed chief editor, and the volume was issued on December 1, 1913. The book will be sent to all registered delegates free of cost. Others may secure it from the office of the association for $1 a copy postpaid.

—I SHOULD LIKE to know the percentage of the population of the United States that belong to the Sunday school. Also the percentage of those in the Sunday school who join the church.—E. B.

The percentage of the population in Sunday school is 16.6, according to the report made at the World's Sunday School Convention in Zürich last July. It is generally conceded that between 75 and 80 per cent. of the accessions to the church on confession come from the Sunday school. What percentage of the scholars become church members is not so easily answered. This would be an interesting matter for each superintendent in his own school. We fear the result would be far from satisfactory. More active evangelism would probably result.

—WHAT PERCENTAGE of young people are Sunday school members and workers? What methods are used in winning those who lack interest?—E. B.

It is not possible to give the exact percentage in the Sunday schools, but it can be said that the adult department is growing faster than any other part of the school. The adult movement is popular. The International certificate is issued to all classes organizing according to the International standard. The first certificate was issued in 1908. Two years later 15,240 had been issued. In 1911, 20,950 certificates had been issued, and the membership of the adult classes had reached 544,652. In Europe this feature of Sunday school work is almost wholly lacking. Hardly any children over fourteen years of age are to be found in the Sunday school. Indeed, not many over twelve years of age. Some methods used in working up a large adult department are the wearing of an emblem, a red button with a white center; slides showing different types of adult classes are obtainable with a lecture to go with them; street parades are sometimes conducted; adult Bible class reading courses are published. Mr. W. C. Pearce is superintendent of the adult department. His address is Mallers Building, Chicago, Ill. Send to him for a leaflet on "One Hundred Things One Hundred Classes Have Done." Send two cents for postage.

PERFECT CAKE AND BISCUIT MAKING

ROYAL

which is recommended by experts and leading teachers of cookery.

Royal is the only baking powder made from Royal Grape Cream of Tartar. Its exclusive use eliminates the chance of failure and polluted food that goes with adulterated brands.

All sorts of tricks, false tests and statements are employed to sell baking powders of inferior class, made from alum acids and lime phosphates, both undesirable to those who require high-grade cream of tartar baking powder to make clean and healthful food.

Safety lies in reading the ingredient clause upon the back of the label. Unless this names "Cream of Tartar" the powder should be rejected.

"JESUS IS HERE!"

The main thing, of course, is that e y one acknowledges him to be J is. There is no questioning of his p son or his power.

The newspaper men have reason to f awed at his power. So far not one p er has been able to secure a picture. A empts have been made to draw sk ches. Some of them are printed in he morning papers. They are all a f ure, by the consent of the news- p ers themselves.

Other wonderful things are a part o ll this, but to the mind of Richard a myself nothing is so great about h as himself.

How can we describe that? We can o y say what we actually witnessed a felt. When we reached the place o is abode following the address he g e us yesterday we found it was the p rest and worst tenement block in tl city.

We went up five flights of stairs a knocked at a door at the very end o a dark passage, and Jesus himself o ned it for us.

When we went in, at first we could n distinguish anything clearly. But tl first person we recognized was the m n who had cried out 'God be merci- f to me a sinner!'

And what do you think he was do- n?

He was seated at a small table by tl side of the little Italian girl Jesus h held in his arms there by Wash- n ton's statue, actually trying to m ke artificial flowers like those the le girl had held in her hand while us was talking!

I think we were so astounded at the ht that at first it absorbed all our ught. Then we began to note other ngs in the room.

There were at least nine other per- s there besides the Master. And y were all at work making various icles of clothing or wreaths similar those in the child's hand. There re five children, from three to nine rs of age, two women and two men.

The room was about ten by twelve size. Opening from it was another m without any window, in which we ld see two other women using a ving machine. There was a small ve in this room. Over it hung a ies of lines from which hung doll sses. A pot of glue was on the ve close by the side of a kettle which learned afterwards contained some getable soup.

'Both rooms were crowded with per boxes which contained the crude terials brought in, out of which wers and doll clothes were being de.

'I have been familiar, as you know, chel, with slum conditions in the ctangle, for a good many years. But re was something about the condi- ns here in these two rooms where se human beings herded together t was desolate and hopeless in the reme. It seemed to be absolutely ond redemption even by God him- f.

'And then I felt dazed in mind and rt as I looked at Jesus and saw him ually living among these creatures.

'He preserved the same all-pervad- calm he always shows. That, so , is his most commanding quality. en at the height of his indignant nunciation in Wall Street I could not ape that feeling of calm in the midst the torrent that swept through him.

'He went from one to another, ietly helping in the work, a little er we came in. And after we had en there perhaps an hour, though kept no account of time, he cleared ay a little space on one side of the om, and going to a cupboard, took t some dishes, and set them on a ble.

"Then he went into the other room, d we could hear him gently speak to ne one there, who we afterward rned was sick, lying on a mattress the floor.

"Then he set the soup and small plate of bread on the table and with a smile, such a smile as only his face could reveal, he motioned all to stop their work and eat.

"We sat at the table with the rest. Jesus held the little girl in his lap. She was so tired that in a few minutes she fell asleep, with a crust of the bread between her lips.

"But when all were seated, he lifted his hand, and in the language they understood he asked the Father's blessing.

"There was a moment then, Rachel, when I felt my heart almost breaking.

"Here sat the Jesus of the centuries; he who overcame death and hell; he who raised the dead and forgave sins; he who was one with the Father. Here he sat amid these sordid, poverty-smitten, pitiful humans, and yet only half an hour's ride from where he sat were Dives and his tribe surfeited in luxuries, waited on by swarms of servants, going to sleep in clean and perfumed chambers—and—

"Then I could begin to get some faint glimmer of his mighty purpose in being there among these people, and to see dimly why he did not by some stroke of divine power smite the system under which we live with some sudden catastrophe as a rebuke for its injustice and cruelty.

"During the meal Jesus spoke naturally and helpfully to all. And after everything had been eaten in eager haste, as if the time were precious, all went back to work again while Jesus put the little girl on a couch and Richard and myself removed the dishes, washed them and put them away.

"Just as we finished this work, which Jesus smilingly allowed us to share with him, the door was violently burst open and a drunken man came in.

"He trod on the paper boxes as he lurched over the floor, and going up to the table where the man Clay Ross was at work, snatched a nearly finished wreath out of his fingers and tore it in pieces. He then reached out two filthy hands and crushed between them a large number of artificial blossoms.

"Richard had made a stride toward the man to stop him, when I saw Jesus lay a hand gently on his arm, and Richard drew back.

"The drunken man went up to one of the women and struck her over the head and shoulders several drunken blows. The woman uttered feeble cries, and one of the other men tried to protect her, swearing horribly all the time.

"The drunken man seized a chair and lifted it as if to fling it at the man. At this moment the little girl awoke, sat up and began to cry."

An Old Subscriber's Opinion

I have been taking THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for twelve or fifteen years, and I feel I could not feel happy without it, especially on the Sabbath, when I cannot get to church. It is a great help to me, and that story, "Jesus Is Here!" is going to be great! MRS. J. L.

A Virginia Reader's View

I must congratulate you on THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. This weekly sermon is a masterpiece. So is Pastor Sheldon's new story. The paper is full of good reading. How you can afford such a fine paper so cheap, I cannot understand. The sermons are worth more than the subscription. You may count on me as long as I feel able to have the paper. (MISS) S. E. L.

ANSWERS TO FINANCIAL QUERIES

MRS. N. M. S., ILLINOIS. The Hartford-Arizona Copper Mining Company is not mentioned in Stevens' Handbook.

R. M. N., FLORIDA. Baltimore and Ohio convertible 4½s are an attractive investment. At 91 the yield is about 4.90, which as you can see is satisfactory. They may be had in $500 denominations.

REV. C. C. C., CONNECTICUT. The Delaware and Hudson Company stock is far the most attractive security on your list. With exception of a few years in its earlier history the road has paid dividends continuously since 1826.

D. T. S., KANSAS. We regret that you did not receive your 1b per cent. Industrial Savings and Loan dividend from the State Banking Department on December 1. The delay has been occasioned, we are told, by the court's not having authorized the payment to the shareholders.

REV. J. R. S., OHIO. Wood, Harmon & Co. are regarded as a very successful firm of real estate operators. But we do not recommend long distanee real estate speculation for our readers. The results may be disappointing.

A. F. B., WEST VIRGINIA. We have not succeeded in tracing the present whereahouts of the men who were responsible for getting you to invest $450 with the Sherman Trust Company, formerly of New York, nor can we discover what became of the company and its eash assets. It seems to be a queer case, and we doubt that you will ever see any part of your money again.

A. C., MAINE. For your investment of $3,000 we suggest one each of the following bonds:

Erie First Consolidated 7s at 110¾.
Hocking Valley First 4½s at 100¼.
Lake Shore and Michigan Southern 4s (1928) at 90.

These securities seem to meet your severe requirements.

C. W. S., RHODE ISLAND. (1) No receiver has yet been appointed for the Heffron Company of Syracuse. We understand that a stockholder, a Mr. C. H. Bickford, of Adams, New York, is seeking to have this done through a general appeal of dissatisfied stockholders. Mr. Bickford claims that the company is in poor condition. (2) We should not add to our venture by sending good money after bad.

J. D. D., KANSAS. At the present moment it is quite impossihle to say whether the holders of the bonds of the New York Real Estate Security Company will lose all or only a part. You are mistaken about where you saw the advertisement. It was not in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. We have steadfastly refused this advertising — an attitude unfortunately not adopted by the other magazines. The failure seems to be a disastrous one.

MISS D. L. E., NEW YORK. The Utica Gas and Electric Company refunding and extension gold 5s are regarded as an attractive investment issue, and we see no reason why you should sell your two bonds. But we cannot understand why the brokerage firms deducted $10 for each bond when they cashed your interest coupons because the price of the bonds had "gone up." Ask them for a real explanation or else send us the nume of the firm.

L. E. D., Oklahoma. To determine the truth of the claim that the Haney Fire Apparatus Company had received large orders from the Fire Department of the City of New York, we wrote to the department, and have received the following letter: "Fire Commissioner Johnson has your letter. There is no apparatus in the New York City Fire Department furnished by the Haney Fire Apparatus Company." We should like to have Mr. Haney's explanation.

MRS. M. S. L., PENNSYLVANIA. Your certificate of 100 shares of the Northern Pacific Railroad is absolutely worthless. Onee in a while some fellow comes into Wall Street and attempts to borrow money on this stock. The last man who did this actually got away with the money, but was caught, and is now serving time at Sing Sing Prison. The stock is also used occasionally as a means of threatened lawsuits. We have seen it quoted at 50 cents a share, also at $2 a share, but at present there is no market for the stock at any price.

M. E., MINNESOTA. We have known of the Van Sant Company, St. Paul, for a number of years, although THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has never had any direct dealing with the concern. The mortgages you have been offered seem to be well secured. On account of their long maturities and lack of marketability farm loans, while usually safe, are not always desirable investments for many people. Before accepting the firm's offer, look into the merits of public service bonds. The latter may better meet your needs.

MISS L. W., NEBRASKA. If you will again read the newspaper advertisement of the Railroads Unimproved Land Association you will find that this concern really doesn't guarantee to give a 160-acre farm to each person sending $15. There's a joker in the ad. The "joker" isn't easily seen. But it's in the advertisement just the same. There are two or three lines of small type, far overshadowed by the rest of the big advertisement, which say that if the farms are all gone when late remittances come in the senders will be given instead 100 shares of stock in an orchard company. It's a pretty slick scheme—stock selling up to date.

MISS C. M., NEW YORK. We believe that American Public Service Company's first lien 6 per cent. gold bonds predicate an exceedingly attractive investment security in point of yield and soundness. We prefer, however, that you select a first and refunding 5 per cent. bond of the Virginia Railway and Power Company. These bonds are sold by the same firm and are recommended by them. The latter issue is listed on the New York Stock Exchange and will yield 5.40 per cent. on latest quoted price.

R. W., PENNSYLVANIA. We have never been able to see great attraction in the preferred stock of the American Utilities Company. This company is a great holding corpo ration for a lot of small gas, electric power and light companies, and in the amalgamation water may have been injected, thus diluting and weakening the substance, presumably. We should prefer a more tangible security for our investment. The bonds of many public utility corporations pay almost as well as the stocks and are much safer. We shall be glad, if requested, to furnish any reader with a list of public utility securities, returning from 5 to 6 per cent., which we believe to be safe.

G. L., CALIFORNIA. (1) Steel common is highly speculative. Were we sure that the present rate of dividends would be continued, a purchase of steel would be a good one, for at 56⅜ the investment yield is within a few points of nine per eent. It is doubtful, however, if the Steel Corporation can keep up the tremendous paec it has been golng and whieh has permitted it to pay 5 per eent. on the common stock. (2) Atchison offers the most attractive speculative investment of any of the stocks on your list. Still, it must be regarded as lacking in many of the qualities that a security should possess as an investment for a person who can ill afford to assume any speculative risk whatever.

G. R. M., PENNSYLVANIA. (1) For the Investment of your funds, amounting to approximately $10,000, so as to yield between 5 and 5½ per cent. and as meeting your other requirements, we would suggest the following issues:

	Price	Amount	Yearly Income
$2,000 City of San Francisco, Calif., 5 per cent. bonds, due May 1, 1919	101 and Int.	$2,020	$100
2,000 Erie R. R. equipment 5 per cent. bonds, due January 1, 1920	98 and Int.	1,072	100
2,000 Fonda, Johnstown & Gloversville consol. mortgage 4½s per cent bonds, due 1952	89 and Int.	1,780	90
2,000 Omaha & Council Bluffs Street Ry. consolidated mortgage 5 per cent bonds	97 and Int.	1,040	100
2,000 East Pennsylvania Gas & Electric Co. first 5s	92 and Int.	1,840	100
1,000 St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Ry. (River and Gulf Division) first 4s	80 and Int.	800	40
$11,000		$10,362	$530

This is an income yield of approximately 5¼ per cent., and the value of the bonds at maturity is about $650 in excess of their cost as shown above.

(2) Any representative banking firm can supply the above issues.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

OUT of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." What rich evidence of the eternal truth of this Scriptural declaration the mail that comes the editor of this corner of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD daily gives! Many counts of answered prayer are received, but many more readers in the ness of gratitude seem to be joyly fulfilling a promise made to God simply acknowledging to the world rough this column his answer to eir prayers. "I wish to acknowlge God's goodness to me in answer prayer," is the message of these ters. Thus Miss J. F. W. of Har, Iowa, writes, and Mary B., Maville, N. C., and B. C., Emmitt, nn., and hosts of others with varians.

Miss B. L., of Blair, Neb., asks that insert the following: "Mrs. C. L. , I know that God does hear and swer prayer." Is that a message some friend or an answer to some ubter? or is it just the exultant tesnony of some heart recently overhelmed by the wonder of a direct sponse to prayer?

"My husband's life was involved, d God, in wonderful mercy and odness, spared his life. Many times ve my prayers been answered, and hen not I know there is some other ay best for me." This is from Miss B. L., Chicago, Ill. Out of such periences must have grown the mforting hymn, "He Leadeth Me."

mother, Mrs. J. H. of Montreal, rites that she thinks it her duty to ld her testimony to the power of others' prayers for the conversion her children, and believes that others everywhere should claim the romises..

Such testimonies justify the many tters received which tell us of the terest taken in this department, and the great help and comfort it is in dividual lives. "I prayed day after ay," writes another mother, Mrs. C. S. of Germantown, Pa., "that God ould create in my boy a clean heart id renew a right spirit within him, t it seemed as if there was no anver. One dark night I said to myelf, 'I am not praying to a god of ood or stone, but to a living God who does hear and answer prayer.' Next Sunday evening both my boys knelt at the altar."

We wish we might print word for word every letter received. We shall continue to give the substance of as many as possible each week and to acknowledge the receipt of all. And indeed the list below of those who know their prayers are being answered day by day, carries its own wonderful message of comfort and help to us all.

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

A VETERAN OF THE CROSS

I AM in my ninetieth year and am well and still wanted," said Rev. . A. Campbell of Corona, New York ity, as he walked briskly into my udy the other day, and I could not elp looking up to his bright, genial, uddy face with a feeling of spontaeous regard, for I knew he had been reaching the Word for sixty-eight ears in the East and West to all inds of people in all kinds of places. e is still preaching—is able to reach—loves to preach and will be lad to preach a thousand years if od lets him live. He preached August 17 in the Union Evangelical hurch, where I have had the joy of elling the best story ever told for irty-two years. Mr. Campbell said ie other day: "The glory of the old inister is in preaching the old Gosel to new congregations."

He had a part in the revival of 1857 nd of unforgettable scenes in victories for Christ in Ohio. Once, hasening to an appointment, the horse taggered down the side of the road nd died. He unbuckled the saddle nd went on. The service was a little ate, but many came to the penitent orm. Once, after a service, a man who had been pleased with his sermon ook him under both arms and said, Brother Campbell, I never thought ou could preach like that," and enhusiastically shook him so that he ore Campbell's coat on both sides—rather costly compliment, as it was he minister's pulpit coat.

Mr. Campbell attributes his health —for he is the exemplification of a man with a clear mind in a sound body —to vigorous exercise, temperate habits, purity, and a happy occupation. Among Long Island ministers he is known as "the grand old man." He has written an autobiography of great interest that tells of God's providential dealings with him. His community friends make much of his recurring birthdays and anticipate his rounding out a century—preaching, as he desires, to the end.

ENJOYS IT FROM BEGINNING TO END

I give THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to different ones to read after we have finished with it. Sometimes I send a copy to Scotland. We all like it very much, and enjoy it from beginning to end. Sometimes, when things seem to be against us, THE HERALD arrives and I get something to comfort me. I wish it every success, and long may it continue to be a help to others.

GIPSY SMITH IN BIRMINGHAM

THE recent Gipsy Smith meetings at Birmingham, Ala., have become a memory and a hope—a hope built upon his promise to come again. A temporary auditorium with a seating capacity of about five or six thousand was put up. The first night that building was crowded and about five thousand people turned away. Night after night the crowds came. He held daily services at noon and in the evening, and never once did enthusiasm drag. After two and a half weeks of hearing him free twice a day, five thousand people turned out to hear his wonderful lecture "From Gipsy Tent to Pulpit," with tickets at fifty cents apiece to defray the expenses of the meetings. After all bills were paid, there was a surplus of something over $400, which was divided among various local charities.

EVANGELIST GIPSY SMITH

Night after night hundreds of men, women and youths came forward at the meetings resolved from henceforth to measure their lives by the standard of Christ and to follow as nearly as they could the pattern of the Christ-life.

Saturday nights were the Gipsy's rest nights, but he gave them both up to the negroes. Every seat was taken, and there was a colored choir of 500 voices. Seldom, even in the South, has there been such a meeting of colored people. The singing was at times weird and plaintive. He asked that they sing as they did in their own churches, and a mighty volume of song arose in "Swing low, sweet chariot," "I want to be like Jesus in my heart," "I couldn't hear nobody prayin'," etc. He got them singing, and he could not stop them; he wanted to speak but before he could say more than a word, a voice here or over yonder would take up the strain again, and the big audience caught it up and drowned all else. Finally, he asked the choirmaster to stop them until he could speak. This was done, but every once in a while a voice in some part of the building would sing a line, and before you knew it, five thousand voices would join in.

The evangelist took his subject from one of their own songs, "I want to be like Jesus in my heart." They listened attentively and here and there they would speak out: "Ain't it the truth?" "Yes, sir!" "He knows!" "That's right!" etc. At the second Saturday night service, these colored people wanted to present Gipsy Smith with something as a remembrance. They settled on a Bible, and after the regular collection was taken up, a colored preacher held his hat and from all parts of the building they streamed down the long aisles and cast in their mites to buy the Bible for the white evangelist. The Bible was later presented at a noonday meeting.

ROME'S "ESSENTIAL REQUIREMENTS"

From the Christian Standard, Cincinnati, November 15, 1913

A NOTABLE example of the invertebrate subserviency of our political press to the Papacy is found in the interview of Cardinal Gibbons, on September 28, and published throughout the land the next morning. The deliverances of the cardinal are given such an atmosphere of deference as would commend them to the ignorant or thoughtless as embodying the highest wisdom and patriotism. The reporters with silent applause, so to speak, record from the lips of the prelate that "the first essential requirement [for Christian union] is the recognition of the Sovereign Pontiff, who, as the successor of St. Peter, is the divinely appointed head of Christendom." He adds that, this essential requirement met, "if the various Christian denominations of the United States were once united, working with one heart and one spirit, what a wonderful influence our Christian forces would exert in the civilization and the Christianizing of mankind! What amazing things would then be done for humanity!"

No one knows better than does Cardinal Gibbons that during the centuries in which this "essential requirement" of "recognizing the Sovereign Pontiff" obtained in Germany, Austria, Italy, France, Spain, Portugal and even England, most "amazing things," appalling things, were done "for humanity"—and to humanity. In social and civil affairs "man began with the baron," and in religious affairs with the priest. All below them were but the prey of these orders, with no rights their masters were bound to respect. Those centuries marked the night of human liberty and welfare. It is "amazing," even startling, that a prominent public man in this land devoted to liberty should propose a return to those intolerable conditions, out of which the nations mentioned have been struggling for four hundred years, through ordeals of blood and fire; and from the dread and horror of which not even those which have been most successful in their struggle are yet delivered. What has been done "for the civilization of mankind" in those lands in which even up to our day this "essential requirement" has prevailed — the Philippines, South America, Mexico, and even Italy, the home of the "Sovereign Pontiff"?

Here, then, are the fruits of Cardinal Gibbons's "essential requirement" in Italy. No one knows all this better than the cardinal, and yet he would subject the United States to the present pontiff, who has repeatedly condemned and anathematized all our principles of free government and the institutions through which they operate—sovereignty of the people, supremacy of the civil power, free speech, liberty of worship, public schools, civil marriage, amenability of priests to the civil law, etc. He knows that if his "first essential requirement" should obtain in the United States, it would immediately close all Protestant churches, all public schools, make marriage a "sacrament" for priestly revenues, hush the voice of free speech, and establish a despotic censorship of the press.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

A Red-Letter Subject*

TWELVE great verses of the Bible have been selected for the twelve Consecration Meetings of the New Year. There is no arbitrary rule for selecting some Scripture verses as being greater than others. It is possible a universal rule would be recognized if based upon the effect of verses upon the individual life. To you, that passage of Scripture is greatest which has proven so in your life. It not only would be an excellent exercise in retrospection, but also in examination of one's Bible knowledge, to set down in order experiences associated with Bible verses that would make the latter stand out on the pages.

"A Red Letter Subject" is used above as a title because the great verse selected for the Consecration Meeting for January 4 is one of those printed in red in the Red Letter Edition Bible: words uttered by Jesus himself. "Art thou a master of Israel and knowest not these things?" he asked Nicodemus, and among the things that Nicodemus seemed not to know was that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Now there is a verse which, by the universal standard suggested above, might be called the greatest by all Christians. Of course, it was not at that time a written word, but had it been, Nicodemus, devout and learned Jew that he was, would have seen in it nothing great. The mere statement of the fact would have been nothing to him until he had experienced that fact.

It was a good selection with which to open the new year's work. A good selection for the Consecration Meeting. A good selection to consider long and earnestly, writing your own name in the verse; writing the names, one by one, of those who are dearest to you into it; writing in the names of those you call your enemies, if such there be. It might help in this matter of our re-consecration to master that verse in some such way, and to assure ourselves that for us it is actually the greatest truth ever uttered.

This, as always, is a good time to start a young people's prayer meeting on the right basis for the whole year. It is natural to fall into periods of time which have a beginning and an ending, and it is a scientific fact and not a superstition that much depends upon a right start. The right start can be made, true enough, any time one sees the necessity, but there is a value and a certain sense of achievement that strengthens one's determination in having made that start in the natural place for it—the beginning of a fixed period of time.

At the beginning of the years—not the single years but the years that make up our lifetime—the start in Christian living can best be made. And if that is so for all the years, it is so for each individual year that finds us still uncommitted upon this great question. Certainly it is right and perhaps best to focus the thought of the evening just here; and to insist to ourselves and with our neighbors that the only safe basis for a right start is the acceptance of this great Red Letter Verse in John.

* "TWELVE GREAT VERSES. I. THE SALVATION VERSE." John 3: 16. (Consecration Meeting). Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic for Sunday, January 4, 1914.

The Year's Morning*

WE CAN hardly think of David as an idler. The Scriptural biographies of him reflect a busy life. The Psalms reveal a vast amount of literary application. It may be a matter of no importance, yet it is just possible that inspired souls do not always attain to the perfectness of expression found in the Bible, at the first attempt. To speak in modern phraseology, it seems scarcely credible that David wrote the fifth Psalm in its final form at the first sitting. He did not dash it off in a moment of inspiration and send it in to the printers. His inspiration took shape out of the experiences of his life, and it is not impossible that he wrote that Psalm little by little. The same thing can be said with equal propriety of everything in the Scriptures and without disturbing the belief of any who hold that the idea is out of keeping with the character of the contents of the sacred Book.

Did David utter a new resolution at the beginning of a new year, or declare a habit of his life when he said, "My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord, in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee and will look up"?

Is no resolution worth much that is not founded in experience? To ask the question is not to imply a negative answer. New knowledge or new light on a subject and strong impulses justify new resolutions. But the members of the morning watch will look on this verse of the fifth Psalm not as a declaration of a resolution, but as a song; a song of the morning watch; a song of confidence and exultation. It took form and substance and expression, as most great songs do, from the experiences of the author. The devotion of David as depicted in the Psalms is one of the most beautiful things in the Bible.

Have we had experiences that make us wish we could condense them into a few words of beautiful song?

And yet David seems to have been experiencing anything but joyous times just then. He goes on to give reasons why he will, in the morning, direct his prayer to God. You will find them, of course, in the Psalm. He seems to have been compassed about by hateful enemies, and to be in some trial of faith.

Is it not true that often our only reason for daily prayer is the fact that we have made a resolution to observe such a custom? and is the morning watch invariably the source of strength and courage for the day that David seems to have found it? We are admonished to have a reason for the hope that is in us and to be able always to give it. Our strongest hopes find outlet in prayer and should be based on the strongest reasons. This is a very practical lesson for the first meeting in the new year. It may be that the meeting may gain much in value and have an influence throughout all of the coming twelve months if this sensible and practical aspect of the morning watch is brought out in testimony.

* "A SONG OF THE MORNING WATCH." Reasons for Daily Prayer. Ps. 5: 1-7. Epworth League Topic for Sunday, January 4, 1914.

AMONG THE WORKERS

—A SPECIAL PUBLIC meeting for the advancement of rescue work in Boston was held November 19 at the West End Rescue Mission. The mission could not accommodate all who wished to attend. Helpful addresses were made by leading pastors and others, and a supper of sandwiches, doughnuts and coffee was served both to the audience and to many waiting outside. This mission is "on the firing line for Christ in darkest Boston."

—THE BETHESDA LEPER HOME, well known to our readers, is in great need of bandages. These should be two to three inches wide and made of old linen, cotton, cheesecloth, sheets, etc., but not of colored material. The rolls must not be over three inches in diameter. Send them well wrapped for protection, and with your name and address on the package, so acknowledgment can be made. Always prepay expressage. Address R. Dan Wolterbeek, Room 1107, World Building, New York City.

—THE SIXTH annual session of the Medical Missionary Conference will be held under the auspices of the American Medical Missionary Association at the Battle Creek Sanitarium, Battle Creek, Mich., December 30 to January 2. Bishop E. R. Hendrix will preside. Prominent missionary men and women are expected. Missionaries of all denominations are invited and entertained by the institution. The secretary, George C. Tenney, will be glad to correspond with those who are interested.

—BIBLE CLASSES FOR DEAF-MUTES. Hiding one's light under a bushel still has the effect of leaving others in darkness. Perhaps more such classes as these might spring into existence if those who successfully conduct them would spread the news. The writer of an interesting article in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of September 10 named several deaf-mute Bible classes in the South, and gave one the distinction of being the original. Evidently he did not know of the class in the First Presbyterian Church, Knoxville, Tenn., organized in 1885 by Miss Rebecca E. Davis, and still a very efficient body. Miss Davis gives us the interesting information that several of the classes mentioned in the article referred to are taught by former members of the Knoxville class. Perhaps there are Bible classes for still other kinds of unfortunates of whose work the Christian public would be glad to hear.

—THE MISSION YACHT Messenger, which for a number of years past has supplied incoming vessels in New York with religious reading matter, is no longer seaworthy. Captain Benn, her commander, reports that the old yacht is practically out of service. She was originally the tender of the American warship Maine, which was blown up in Havana Harbor, and she saved many lives on that occasion. During her years of service in the mission work she has been the means of carrying the Gospel to thousands of seamen of different nationalities. The Mission Yacht Association is inviting public co-operation in providing a new yacht to carry on the work. Any interested reader may address C. L. Bundy, Maritime Exchange, New York City.

—IN THE SEPTEMBER number of the magazine edited, written and published by prisoners in the Oregon State penitentiary, an outside correspondent tells of a wealthy manufacturer, who was unjustly sentenced to Sing Sing prison. He studied his fellow prisoners and their histories, and became convinced of the trustworthiness of convicts who upon release resolve to lead honest lives. After his own release he resumed control of his business, and determined to employ only ex-convicts thenceforward. The writer states that the experiment has proved highly satisfactory, no one such employee having failed to make good. For nearly ten years the prisoners have gotten out this interesting monthly, Lend A Hand, devoted to the moral and intellectual improvement of the inmates and to overcoming the public's prejudice against the man who has erred and paid the penalty to the State. The magazine is a credit to its publishers, and has never missed an issue. It is supported solely by subscriptions, and deserves to live and expand. Such work can scarcely be too warmly encouraged. Communications are addressed to Lend A Hand, Box C, Salem, Ore.

—REV. E. B. HASKELL, American Mission, Salonica, writes: "In your issue of August 6 is an article entitled 'Defeated Bulgaria Sues for Peace,' quoted from a long cablegram dated at Salonica, to which my name was attached, among others, and which repeated with great detail the stories of Bulgarian atrocities. When I was asked to sign this cablegram I declined on the ground that, having made no personal investigation, I could not vouch for the alleged atrocities. But, as it contained an appeal for help for people whom I knew to be needy, I expressed my willingness to sign a note to be attached to the cablegram, as follows: 'I have no personal knowledge of the atrocities described above. But whether due to atrocities or to the fortunes of war I have no doubt that there is great suffering in the places named, and I heartily join in the appeal for relief.' The Salonica paper, Liberté, published this note at the end of the cablegram. Unfortunately THE CHRISTIAN HERALD omitted it, thereby seeming to give my personal endorsement to the main cablegram, whereas the only thing I signed was the note. As this omission seems to have caused considerable feeling among my Bulgarian friends I must beg you to rectify it. It is only right to add that there is no 'Armenian Evangelical Church' in Salonica, and the Rev. O. M. Khouvanian, whose name was signed to the cablegram, is a Gregorian priest."

Intoxicated On Coffee

About 15 centuries ago an Arab herder of goats driving the flock through some new country was alarmed at the antics of the animals and thought they were "possessed of evil spirits."

Each day the same thing occurred after the goats had eaten of a certain kind of berry. The goatherd thought he would eat a few to try the effect.

That was the discovery of coffee.

Arabs learned to brown the berries and boil them, drinking the liquor, which was then and now recognized to have a direct action on the heart, and of course the reaction and depression later on.

Coffee sets up a partial congestion of the liver; dulls the brain; wrecks the nerves, and interferes with digestion.

Anyone can easily prove whether it be coffee that causes the periodical headaches, sick stomach, bowel troubles, weak heart, kidney complaint, weak eyes, neuralgia, rheumatism or nervous prostration.

Simply leave it off entirely for ten days and have a rich, piping hot cup of Postum.

If you find, in a day or two, that you are getting better, that's your cue, follow it straight back to health, comfort and the power to do things.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A spoonful dissolves in a cup of hot water, and with sugar and cream makes a delicious beverage instantly.

Questions and Answers

C. H. L., Portland, Me. Does God punish in this life, with sickness and other misfortune?

The Bible does not teach that all trouble comes from God as a punishment. It recognizes the fact that trouble is in the world, and, while it has some very definite things to say about it, it does not attempt to give a complete solution of the whole problem. Heb. 12: 5-11 declares that God does in some instances discipline or "chasten" those whom he loves, but this could hardly be called punishment. (See also Deut. 8: 5, Ps. 94: 12, John 15: 2.) Sometimes, however, calamity is a definite punishment, as in many cases during the history of Israel, and particularly in their exile. The book of Job is a beautiful explanation of a form of suffering which has the double purpose of disciplining the soul and glorifying God. Nothing can bring such credit to God as the demonstration made by a soul that trusts and praises him in the midst of misfortune. Paul and the other apostles gloried in their opportunities to suffer for Jesus' sake. They rejoiced "that they were counted worthy to suffer shame in his name" (Acts 5: 41). They felt that he had borne so much for them that they wanted to bear something for him. The Bible nowhere encourages people to dodge suffering; it exhorts them to bear it, while at the same time it exhorts them to lessen the sufferings of others, and help them bear their woes. See James 1: 2-5; I Peter 4: 12-19; Gal. 6: 2.

W. A. B., Howell, Mich. The evangelist who addressed his hearers in these words: "If ever in your life you were nearer God than you are now, you are a backslider, and God has written 'backslider' across your heart," was not accurate, strictly speaking. There are depths and shallows in every spiritual experience—times of physical or mental depression when our highest hopes and desires seem farther off than usual. This may be due to various causes, some of them beyond our control, but it is not to be confused with backsliding, which is usually yielding to temptation knowingly. Besides, it is well for all of us, evangelists included, to remember that it is not our province to judge others, and that God alone knoweth the heart.

Jeannette M., Duluth, Minn. How is the big fund collected by the New York Christian Associations to be divided? What is the Y. W. C. A.'s proportionate share?

The Y. W. C. A. receives $3,000,000, the Men's Association $1,000,000. The former have planned to expend their share thus: Central building, $600,000; Harlem building, $500,000; boarding home, $350,000; nurses' club, $400,000; West Side Branch, $50,000; Colored Branch, $100,000; current expenses, $150,000; equipment, $50,000; National Board building, $800,000. The Men's Association will expend $300,000 on the Bowery Branch; $360,000, Union Branch; $150,000, Colored Branch; $40,000, Williamsburg Branch; $20,000, Intercollegiate Branch, and $40,000 on adjustment fund.

L. E. H., Wentworth, Wis. Please explain Ps. 139, particularly verses 21-24.

The 139th Psalm expresses the eternity, omnipotence and omniscience of God, and that he is ever present with the soul; that it is impossible to get away from him. The question of hating those who hate God, verses 21-22, is somewhat difficult. Since the time of Jesus it is difficult to think of hatred as having any place in a sanctified heart. Yet there is wrath against those who are attempting to thwart God's work and who promote injustice and cruelty. This hatred of evil is sometimes hard to separate from a hatred of those that do the evil. This is the thought of this passage. The psalmist had so allied himself with God that God's enemies were his enemies. He hated their works, and strove with all his might against them. Verses 23, 24 are particularly beautiful. The psalmist asks God to search his heart, to find out if there is any "way of wickedness" in him, and prays to be led "in the way everlasting."

J. B. G., Wilton, Me. The fig tree incident related in the Gospels has been a subject of much controversy, and the passage in Mark 11: 13 has been claimed by some to be a mistake in the transcription of the record as to the words "He found nothing but leaves, for the time of figs was not yet." It is explained by some writers (including Pliny and Macrobius) that the fig tree in Palestine produces fruit at two or even three seasons of the year, and Hackett (in his Scripture Illustrations) tells us that the fruit precedes the leaves. One might infer from this that if a tree had leaves it might be expected to give evidence at least of having had fruit. In the case of this particular tree, having leaves in advance of the regular time (which "was not yet come") yet with no sign of having borne fruit, it was condemned, as some commentators interpret the case, because of its false pretenses. Trench and others hold that the blighting of the precocious and fruitless tree was designed to convey a rebuke to "the barren traditions of the Pharisees, their ostentatious display of the law, and their vain exuberance of words without the good fruit of works." Still others believe that our Lord, seeing the early leaves, had a right to expect that they would be accompanied by fruit.

THE CHANGING YEAR

THE PASSING YEAR

I GLANCE back o'er the year that's passing now
As from the window of a moving car,
And catch one last farewell, one fleeting view
Of days and hours that quickly fade away,
Like hills and vales and verdant wooded slopes,
And one bright view of river, and 'tis gone.
And then I say: "Good-by, thou passing year!"

I think me then upon the life I've lived—
Its sins, its wrongs, its failures, its low aims;
But, worst of all, its small accomplishments!

"Oh that I'd striven harder!" then say I;
"Had loved myself the less, and man the more,
And yielded never when the tempting came!"

The past is gone, its record is complete,
It is unchanging and unchangeable!

But from the quiver of eternity
The All-Wise One another year will drop,
Bright as an angel from the snow-white throne,
Unchecked, unstained, untarnished and unsoiled,
And e'en to me the privilege will give
To toil, to strive, to love, to pray again,
And make another record, clean and bright!

The question comes: "What shall it, likewise, be?
Shall't show the glory of this new resolve,
Or fit, low, in the arches of the past?"

With face upon the living future set,
As Hezekiah, king in olden day,
I now resolve, as comes this new-born year,
"To walk before thy face, O God, in truth,
And with a perfect and an upright heart,
And do what seemeth good in thy clear sight!"
And then I know that thou indeed wilt bless
Each faltering step and guide with tenderness!

DOUGLAS DOBBINS.

FACING THE NEW YEAR

WHEN the year is on the threshold,
Turn thee to the past;
Gather up its store of blessings,
Claim and hold them fast.
Then go forth into the future
On a path unknown,
Braver, stronger, richer, truer
For the lovelight shown.

MRS. MARY B. WINGATE.

THE ENTERING YEAR

BEFORE me lies a land all unexplored;
No foot of man has left its impress there.
My path across this plain God bids me choose,
And make it straight or crooked as I will.
But right must be the path of those who win
The approbation of their inmost hearts,
And smile of an approving, all-wise God.

A goal, then, I must have—a purpose firm;
A chart and compass, too, I'll surely need
To guide my steps across this trackless plain.
Oh, then I'll make a perfect life my goal!
My chart shall be his Word; my star, his Son;
And if, perchance, I stumble here or there,
If sometimes darksome clouds obscure my view,
When clears my sky I'll press my journey on,
Nor willing turn aside from the bright Star
That points me ever toward my chosen goal—
A moral likeness to my God.

Miss W. M. H., Petersburg, Va. The poetry of the Middle Ages frequently mentions the Saint Gral (or Sangreal), a vessel said to have been made of precious stone and endowed with wonderful virtues. Legend told how it was brought to the earth by angels, and kept in a temple expressly built for it on the summit of a mountain. One variant identified it with the cup used at the Lord's Supper. This legend was developed in the literature of the twelfth century in connection with the wars of the Knights Templars, and it became a favorite theme for poets. Later, Tennyson made it a central theme in his poems on Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table. Much has been written concerning this legend, some of it very beautiful and inspiring.

Dr. St. G. E., of San Juan, Porto Rico, writes: "In recent issues of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD there were some statements in regard to the origin of the jinrikisha in Japan. As a resident in Japan from 1869 to 1876, I have always been under the impression that the man-carriage in question was originally copied from a baby carriage of the same shape, which we had sent to a native blacksmith for repairs, as it appeared shortly afterward. I knew Rev. Mr. Goble, but never heard he had suggested it."

J. K. W., Roland Park, Md., writes: "After having been stirred up by an address to a young people's meeting on the intelligent way of reading the Scripture, I pictured to myself the following: 'Suppose we had the New Testament with each leaf of pure gold, and each letter set in diamonds. This work of art, having been the wonder and admiration of centuries, would come under the scrutiny of a diamond expert, who might claim that many diamonds were faulty from setting. This would no doubt affect its value in the minds of some. On the same principle, the beautiful words of life and love are affected by some 'higher critics'; but those who know their Lord and love him will know that there are those who are 'wise to do evil' in this day, as there were of old."

Miscellaneous

J. G., Minneapolis, Minn. We do not know the writer you mention.

V. R. C., Hillsdale, Mich. Marriages by a regularly ordained minister of any religious denomination are considered legal, the requirements of the statute law of the State being complied with.

L. H. E., Monroeville, Ind. Very few of the apostles were married, as far as the Scripture record shows. Peter was married, and tradition gives the name of his wife as Perpetua; Philip, according to the statement of Clement of Alexandria, had a wife and children; Bartholomew is reported by tradition to have been the bridegroom at the wedding of Cana of Galilee.

R. B., Big Hollow, N. Y. 1. The tree of knowledge conferred the power of distinguishing between good and evil, while the tree of life conferred immortality. The original pair (according to Gen. 3: 22), having eaten the fruit of the first tree, were expelled from Eden lest they should eat of the tree of life also. 2. The name of Cain's wife is nowhere given in Scripture, but there are two ancient Jewish traditions which give the name as Sard and Azura.

E. B. B., River Hebert, N. S., Canada. It is not customary for any officer, minister or layman to occupy the chair at a meeting which is called to decide on his resignation, nor is it even usual for him to be in the room when the motion is put. We can conceive of conditions, however, where a pastor would be quite right in attending a meeting and preventing it from being controlled unfairly by his enemies. Of course, knowing nothing about the case you mention, we cannot express an opinion. Your other question we answer by mail.

THE REAL TROUBLE IN MEXICO

BY WILLARD PRICE

HOW can we explain Mexico? A peculiar social frame of mind seems to prevail there. What shall we think of a people who can tolerate as their rulers men who have risen to power through intrigue and violence—a people who can not only tolerate but actually endorse such rulers, as the Mexicans have now and then seemed inclined to endorse Huerta?

What is the cause, if there be any, back of the peculiar traits of the Mexican? He is reported by visitors to be dishonest, thieving, and lazy. Why? He is grossly ignorant. Why? He is loose in his marriage relations. He sees no particular connection between religion and morality, he is defiant toward law, he is fatalistic toward life and death. He pins his faith to brute force as the only sure means of achieving power and success. What is the reason for all this?

Of course these charges are not true. Like all generalizations about a people, they are only partly true. But the statements are near enough to the plumb-line to make them of vital significance.

Not all Mexicans are liars and thieves and doltards, just as not all Americans are nervous and ambitious and materialistic. But in most nations there are certain traits which mark the majority, and that is true in Mexico. The minority of distinguished and talented men in commercial, professional and public life must be kept in mind as a notable exception to any generalizations made here.

Before we look for the "Why?" of Mexican morals, suppose we examine a little more in detail certain national characteristics. First, take that matter of honesty. It seems to go against the grain of the ordinary Mexican peon to be strictly honest. The peons are the laborers, the common people. They form the vast bulk of the population. Ask one of them a question, and he will give you any answer he thinks you prefer. Whether it happens to be the truth or not appeals to him as a matter of slight importance. If he cannot read in your eyes the answer you want, he will evasively and soothingly murmur "Si, señor," which means absolutely nothing, except that he is eager to please. He would much rather lie than appear impolite. He will cheerfully make futile promises, for his gracious but perverted sense of courtesy leads him to prefer to delight you at the moment even at the cost of disappointing and enraging you to-morrow when promises go unfulfilled.

Yes, of course, it would be easier to gloss over these rough facts with smooth courtesy, and invent gentle excuses for the Mexican. Most writers, including the present scribe, would vastly prefer to do that. But after all, the facts are as they are, and it would be false kindness to the Mexicans to try to veneer or pervert the truth. Permanent improvement can come only by facing conditions as they are.

There is not, perhaps, so much corruption in high places as there has been in times past. The popular comment used to be: "Every Mexican official has his price." An American once said to the governor of a Mexican State:

"Do this for me and I will give you five thousand dollars and nothing need ever be known about it."

"Make it ten thousand dollars and you can tell the world," the governor replied.

This order of things has changed greatly. Government officials and business firms are as reliable in Mexico as elsewhere. But dishonesty still persists as a besetting sin of the multitude. Why?

Then laziness. "Do not to-day what can be put off till to-morrow" is the first commandment in the unwritten constitution of the Mexicans. Beware of the Mexican who engages to do something for you "to-morrow." For "to-morrow" merely means some time in the future. Because of this peculiar point of view Mexico has been humorously dubbed "The Land of To-morrow." It is the land of procrastination; the land of "poco tiempo" or "wait a while." An appointment made for ten o'clock in the morning may be kept at eleven or twelve, or perhaps not until afternoon. The Mexicans never cease wondering at the remarkable energy and promptitude of Americans. When it is intended to keep an appointment promptly, the words "a la inglesa" are added to signify that the appointment is to be kept after the English or American fashion.

MEXICO'S WEALTHIEST LANDOWNER, GENERAL TERRAZAS, ARRIVES ON AMERICAN SOIL

The attitude of the Mexican toward religion is a strange mixture of ridicule, fear and superstition. Respect he has none—except the pseudo-respect which is a concomitant of fear. Profanity has become so extreme that it has almost ceased to be profanity. It has become rather a mere manner of speech. For instance, the owners of pulque-dens, without a thought of being sacrilegious, give such names as the following to their resorts: "The Retreat of the Holy Ghost," "The Delight of the Apostle," "The Retreat of the Holy Virgin," "The Fountain of the Angels," "The Seventh Heaven," "The Hangout of John the Baptist." Church services are attended almost exclusively by the women. A man will poke fun at the church all his life; but when he lies on his deathbed he invariably calls for a priest. Religion is a matter for derision and dread in Mexico—not for respect and reverence. Why?

Law is a thing to be evaded and defied as much as possible. This feeling does not go as far as anarchy. It is a perpetual, brooding resentment. There is a strong national undercurrent of antagonism against all strictures of law. Why?

In every case the "Why?" has but one answer. We have been describing the mind of a slave. All the characteristics that have been enumerated are the characteristics of a slave. And the Mexican mind is a slave mind.

For over three centuries the Mexicans have lived under the rule of oppression. This rule has operated through three agencies—the church, the government, and the system of feudalism. These three forces have contributed to make the Mexican a slave in body, mind, and will.

Every one knows the effect that feudalism has had in every country in which it has been practiced. "The soul of a serf" is the sure result. In Mexico a few hundred men own all the land in the republic. Each of these proprietors or hacendados possesses hundreds of slaves. But no one uses the word "slave" in Mexico. The law declares itself against slavery. And then, like Pilate, having washed its hands of the whole affair by this righteous declaration, the law solemnly winks at the grossest feudal bondage.

This system of bondage, or peonage as it is called, is very simple. The peon receives a scant wage, and then is required to purchase his worldly goods of all varieties at the proprietor's store. There he is encouraged to be extravagant. He very soon runs into debt. It is a very simple matter then to keep him in debt. And the Mexican law decrees that so long as an Indian workman owes a cent to his employer, he is the latter's chattel and must go on working for him until the debt is paid.

You may do what you please with your own chattel and the Mexican hacendados do as they please with their debt-shackled peons. Of course, many proprietors are kind to their workers. But floggings, starvings, and even executions, are not unknown. For three centuries and a half this system, with variations, has prevailed in Mexico. Do you wonder that the Mexican working class has developed a slave mind?

The government, ever since the Spaniard first stepped into the land, has been a tyranny. For almost three centuries Mexico was ruled by Spanish viceroys. As John Wesley Butler has said: "Less than half a million foreigners ruled some ten million Mexicans with a despotism such as high heaven never looked upon save where the Spanish race enacted the same cruelties in other lands." Mexico enjoyed a measure of "independence" under the despotism of Porfirio Diaz. To-day, politics is a sham. The Mexican representative system has been a paper system merely. The will of the people has been accomplished only when it chanced to coincide with the will of the president. No wonder the Mexicans regard law not as an instrument in their hands, but a sword over their heads. No wonder they avoid it and defy it as much as possible. No wonder they esteem brute force as the only effective means of accomplishment. No wonder they have developed the mental and moral characteristics of the slave. All this is but the logical outcome of the rule of oppression.

The third agent of the rule of oppression has been the Roman Catholic Church. Those who have known the more enlightened section of the Roman Church in a country like the United States can form little idea of the conditions which prevail in the so-called "Latin countries." Even to-day, to quote Francis S. Burton, "the Roman Church in Mexico is the deadly and relentless foe of all that is meant by a free press, free thought and speech, and free public schools." The enlightening of the masses would mean the shattering of the rule of oppression, hence the church stands broad-breasted against enlightenment. The story of the priest-exploitation of Mexico, Italy and Spain is too well known to require detailed comment here.

The rule of oppression must pass. The rule of co-operation must take its place if Mexico is to live and grow. Christian missions are perhaps doing more than any other influence to inculcate the new rule. Far and wide throughout the country their stations have been set. Nineteen missionary societies are at work, and their missionaries number about three hundred. At the present time there are over ninety thousand Protestant adherents in Mexico as a result of mission work. The influence of these people is out of all proportion to their number. They are the best educated and frequently become the most powerful persons in their communities. Graduates from mission schools and colleges are assuming high rank among the professional and public men of the land.

The Methodist forces particularly are making a profound impression in Mexico. To take a single instance, the number of students in the schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South is double the number of students in the schools of all other denominations combined. But every mission of whatever denomination is doing creditable work. The influence of mission school education upon the future of Mexico is incalculable. The "Abraham Lincoln of Mexico," Benito Juarez, once said to a Methodist minister: "Upon the development of Protestantism depends the future happiness and prosperity of our country."

PROGRESS OF THE WAR

The rebel assault upon Tampico lasted three days, the Federals successfully repulsing the attack December 14. Admiral Fletcher was obliged to warn the respective generals that hostilities must not be conducted near enough to neutral territory to endanger non-combatants. Hundreds of foreigners, including Americans, took refuge on board the vessels of the American fleet. The fighting was vigorous with heavy artillery duels. Federal gunboats carrying six hundred soldiers were sent to the city's aid from Vera Cruz.

The rebels were commanded by Generals Castro and Villareal. It was charged that all captured combatants were executed, and many were hung in sight of the refugees; their bodies could be seen suspended from telegraph poles. This savagery was charged against both sides. The retirement of the rebels was taken to mean a temporary cessation only on their part.

During the course of events in the south General Villa's troops continued to advance on Ojinaga, but no investment of that place has occurred. General Villa himself was reported to have threatened to expel all Germans and Americans from the city of Chihuahua. When he entered the city he notified members of the Spanish colony that they would have ten days to leave, and their property would be confiscated. The vast estates of the Terrazas and Creel families were confiscated, and Villa announced that the property would be divided among widows and orphans of soldiers who had given their lives for the rebel cause. The son of General Terrazas, who was reported to have been executed, is now said to be held for a large ransom.

Various rumors of intended movements of the rebels appeared in the press, and some lesser engagements took place. It was reported that the Federals were planning offensive measures, with Torreon, directly south of Villa's position, as a base. On December 15 a force of two thousand Zapatistas attacked a town seventeen miles south of Mexico City. Federal reinforcements were sent to the support of the place, and the attack was repulsed. On the same day the Mexican Congress adjourned, leaving President Huerta practically dictator with extraordinary powers. His financial situation was regarded as extremely critical. The Central Bank of Mexico City became the center of panicky conditions when crowds demanded the exchange of their State bank bills for cash. Refugees from the Northern States carried accumulations of these bills, which greatly depreciated in value after Villa's seizure of Chihuahua. On December 17 Villa began his long threatened advance upon Mexico City. The rebel forces around Tampico may prevent the Federal army's going to the aid of the capital. The first battle in the advance will most probably be fought at Torreon. Federal forces at Ojinaga reported ready to march south on Chihuahua city immediately the rebels were on the march. Villa expects to join forces with General Zapata, who is raiding the suburbs of the capital, and with other bodies of rebels who are harassing the Huerta army. The threatened attack upon Monterey has not taken place.

The general situation as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes to press may be said to favor greatly the Constitutionalist cause so far as internal affairs of Mexico are concerned. Outside nations, however, have protested against General Villa's hostile attitude toward foreigners, especially the Spaniards. The demoralization that now threatens business can scarcely help either side in the conflict, but tends to weaken Huerta's prestige. The banks are on the point of suspending payment; and on December 13 it was reported that Huerta's minister of finance secretly sailed for France to seek foreign loans.

The inability to pay Federal troops, coupled with the great popularity Villa must have secured by his Robin Hood-like proceedings in Chihuahua, may cause a large desertion from the government to the Constitutionalist cause. General Carranza has not appeared prominently in news reports the past week. He is said, however, to have taken exception to General Villa's attitude toward foreigners, which may forecast a break between these leaders.

"MOTHER CHURCH" OF LUTHERANISM

THE PASSING OF AN OLD RELIGIOUS LANDMARK IN NEW YORK CITY

ON NOVEMBER 23 another church of downtown New York closed its doors. The massive graystone building with its grim battlemented towers, which for more than seventy years has stood at the corner of Broome and Elizabeth Streets, and has witnessed the change of its surroundings from a "Little Germany" into a "Little Italy," will soon make way for a business structure. The building was erected in 1841 by the First Baptist Church of New York and was sold in 1868 to the Evangelical Lutheran Church of St. Matthew, the oldest Lutheran church in America, and the second church established on Manhattan. The congregation, foreseeing the eventual necessity of vacating the old site, made provision for the preservation of the historic identity of the church by establishing a branch church on West One Hundred and Forty-fifth Street and Convent Avenue, which was served from 1906 to 1910 by the Rev. Martin Walker, now of Buffalo, and since 1910 by the Rev. Otto Ungemach.

The beginnings of this church date back to the time when New York was still New Amsterdam. It is known to have existed in 1649. The first pastor, John Ernst Gutwasser, who arrived in July, 1657, from Holland, was forbidden to preach by the Dutch Reformed authorities, cast into prison and finally sent back to Holland in 1659. When the British captured the city in 1664, Governor Richard Nicolls granted the Lutherans "liberty to send for one minister or more of their religion, and that they may freely and publiquely exercise divine worship according to their conscience." The original of this document, dated December 6, 1664, is still treasured by the church as its official birth certificate.

The first place of worship of the Lutherans, according to contemporary views of the city, was in the vicinity of Hanover Square. When, however, in 1669, Magister Jacob Fabritius came over from Holland to minister to them, they began building a small church just outside the "Landpoort," on Broadway, which was completed under the succeeding minister, Domine Bernhardus Arensius, who arrived in 1671. During the reoccupation of the city by the Dutch in 1673, this church was torn down by order of Director Anthony Colve, because, on account of its proximity to the city wall, it would have endangered the defense of the town. As an indemnity the congregation received a plot of ground inside the wall, on the corner of Broadway and Rector Street, which they occupied for 103 years.

In the first church on this site, a wooden structure, Domine Arensius ministered to his flock till his death in 1691, and Domine Justus Falckner, the first Lutheran pastor ordained in America, from 1703 to 1723. Though the majority of the original members of the congregation were Germans, the church had become entirely Dutch by 1700. But early in the new century the Palatine immigration strengthened the congregation, so that under Falckner's successor, Domine William C. Berkenmeyer, the old church could be replaced, in 1729, by a substantial stone building, called "Trinity Church." In 1750, near the close of Domine M. C. Knoll's ministry, the German element in the church formed a separate society, and not even the efforts of the venerable patriarch of the Lutheran Church in

ST. MATTHEW'S CHURCH, NEW YORK

America, the Rev. Henry Melchior Muhlenberg, who served the old church in 1751 and 1752, could bring the factions together again.

The new society built a stone church in 1767 on Frankfort and William Streets, which was officially designated "Christ Church," but popularly known as the "Swamp Church." This church was served just prior to the Revolution by the Rev. F. A. C. Muhlenberg, who afterwards became the speaker of the first Congress. In the old church on Broadway the Rev. J. A. Weygand ministered to his people in Dutch, German and English from 1753 to 1770. The last Dutch sermon was preached in this building by his successor, Pastor B. M. Hausihl.

The Broadway church succumbed to the great fire of 1776. During the occupation by the British the congregation worshiped in the Scotch Presbyterian church on Cedar Street, and then in the Swamp Church. After the close of the Revolution, in 1784, the two factions of the church were reunited under the name "The United German Lutheran Churches," and called the Rev. John C. Kunze as their pastor. This gentleman was also professor of Oriental languages in Columbia University, and the official interpreter for Congress during its session in New York. In 1797 the first English Lutheran Church in America was established by one of Dr. Kunze's assistants. It was afterwards known as the "English Lutheran Church Zion," but went over into the Episcopal fold in 1810. Dr. Kunze died in 1807. In 1822 another attempt was made to establish an English Lutheran congregation, and a church was erected in Walker Street, and called the Church of St. Matthew. When this English congregation disbanded in 1826, the old congregation moved into the Walker Street church, and became known as the Evangelical Lutheran Church of St. Matthew. The pastors who officiated in the Walker Street church were Dr. F. C. Schaeffer, 1823-1826; Drs. F. W. Geissenhainer, Sr. and Jr., 1826-1838; and Dr. C. F. E. Stohlmann, 1838-1868. The last named died on the same day when the congregation moved into the Broome Street church, May 3, 1868. His successors were the Rev. G. Vorberg, 1869-1873; Dr. Justus Ruperti, who returned to Germany in 1876; the Rev. J. H. Sieker, 1876-1904, and the present pastor, the Rev. Otto Sieker.

For about 150 years a parish school has been maintained in connection with the church. This school is now quartered in the parish house on Washington Heights; Mr. E. H. Engelbrecht is the principal. St. Matthew's Academy and, from 1881 to 1893, also Concordia Collegiate Institute, now at Bronxville, N. Y., found a home in the old school building on Elizabeth Street. In the days of its prime, in the early eighties, over 1,000 children attended the Sunday school and more than 600 were enrolled in the parish school; and there is hardly a Lutheran church in Greater New York which does not number among its members children of old St. Matthew's. The church has also taken a leading part in the establishment of new churches and of charitable institutions, such as the Lutheran Hospital, the Wartburg Home for the Aged in East New York, and the Bethlehem Orphanage at College Point. It is justly regarded as the mother church of Lutheranism in New York.

In December, 1914, the congregation expects to celebrate its 250th anniversary, and a history of the church is in preparation.

Over-Sea Gifts

NEARLY one-half million international money orders, aggregating just under $8,000,000, were sent through the New York post office to foreign countries as Christmas gifts; a million dollars more than last year. Probably a percentage was intended for saving bank accounts in the homelands. The largest number and amount went to Great Britain, second to Italy, and the third largest number, but fifth in amount, to Germany; Austria-Hungary, Sweden, Norway and Switzerland ranking next in amounts. Incoming steamers brought record-breaking loads of mail, 20,000 sacks arriving by five vessels alone.

Excluding Undesirable Immigrants

BY THE proposed new immigration bill reported out of the House Immigration Committee, December 15, Japanese, Chinese, Hindus and other Asiatics will be excluded if the bill become law. At present Japanese and Hindus are admissible. A provision excluding persons who advocate the unlawful destruction of property, overthrow of organized government, or assassination of a government official is expected to apply to militant suffragists and certain classes of labor agitators. Immigrants who cannot read and write their own language will also be denied admission to this country.

The Chicago School Issue

CHICAGO has been stirred by the setting aside of Mrs. Ella Flagg Young in the new election for superintendent of schools. The move is looked upon as "tossing the schools back into the cesspool of politics." Immediately following her defeat, various prominent positions were proposed for her, among them the superintendency of the Milwaukee schools. It is announced that Mrs. Young has accepted an editorial position on a Chicago morning newspaper. Club women, parents, teachers, and others regard Chicago as disgraced in dropping from its educational work one of the foremost educators of the country. Her defeat is attributed to a number of men whose text-books Mrs. Young refused to use.

Unfortunate Dinner Affair

A SEMI-OFFICIAL dinner in Washington Dec. 11 threw administration circles into some dismay. The organization of army and navy officers who served in the Philippines, known as the Order of the Carabao, incurred the keen displeasure of President Wilson by satirical references to his Filipino policy at the annual dinner. War and Navy Departments promptly got into action to determine if deliberate affront had really been offered the administration. The President was reported to have withdrawn his acceptance of honorary membership in the order; the management of the dinner claimed that nothing worse than good-natured fun was intended. The reputed public reflection by army and navy officials upon the administration is thought to be serious enough, however, to result at least in the disbandment of the organization, with possibly a court martial and discipline in individual cases.

DELEGATION OF OHIO CORN-GROWERS WAITING TO BE RECEIVED BY PRESIDENT WILSON

THE enthusiasm stirred up by the awarding of prizes in different States and by the Agricultural Department for the best production of corn, potatoes, cotton and tomatoes by boys and girls resulted in great activity during the past season. State delegations from agricultural clubs visited Washington to see President Wilson and to receive their diplomas from Secretary Houston. It required special trains to convey the army of juvenile farmers from Ohio corn fields, brimming over with the fun of the thing. This work, however, is serious in its purpose and is carried out by the contestants with determination to win the coveted honors for their respective clubs and States by producing the record yield for a single acre in any one crop at a record low price. The corn clubs have attracted the most attention, and Walter Lee Dunson of Alexander City, Ala., is credited with breaking former records by producing just over 232 bushels on a single acre at the cost of 19.9 cents per bushel. The girls are close competitors, but naturally take the lead in the canning contests, and this year Miss Clyde Sullivan, of Cusley, Ga., won the lead by a record of 2,464 cans of tomatoes out of a yield of 5,334 pounds. Besides the excellent incentive given, the boys and girls in these contests obtain valuable experience, and the influence of this work is felt in practical farming throughout the country.

More Suffragette Outrages

REARRESTED December 13, Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst induced a state of collapse by a hunger and thirst strike, and was again released only four days after her arrest. The militant suffragettes signified their displeasure by firing a Liverpool church, which was badly damaged, and by disposing of a big timber yard by fire at Plymouth, where the arrest occurred. Miss Zelie Emerson of Jackson, Mich., has also been rearrested in London for her activities in this movement abroad.

Greece Recovers Islands

THE island of Crete has been formally annexed to Greece with imposing ceremonies, King Constantine personally running up the Hellenic flag over the fort. The evacuation by the protecting Powers took place last February, since when the Greeks have been in control pending this final act. Nine other islands taken by Greece in the course of the Balkan War have also been finally turned over to that country by representatives of the Powers, and two others are to be returned to Turkey.

Noted Cardinal Dead

CARDINAL RAMPOLLA, formerly Papal Secretary of State, died suddenly in Rome on Tuesday, December 16. Apparently in usual health the previous Saturday, and received by the Pope, he was seized with sickness while inspecting the work of choir restoration at St. Peter's, and was removed to his apartments in the Palace of St. Martha, behind St. Peter's, where he passed away the same evening. The doctors gave the cause of death as angina pectoris. Cardinal Rampolla was born in Sicily in 1843. But for the veto of Austria he would have been chosen Pope at the conclave in 1903, Leo XIII having personally indicated him as his successor. After the election of Pius X Cardinal Rampolla lived in semi-retirement, and although occasionally mentioned as a possible successor to the present Pope, had not occupied a position of special prominence in the last ten years. During his days of power, when he enjoyed close relations with Leo XIII, he took a leading part in the movement for the reunion of all Christian churches under the ægis of Rome, although it was a dream that could never be realized. He was shrewd, able, courtly, with a dignified and imposing presence, an urbane and convincing address and the "grand manner" of a "prince of the church." In his later life he became mystical, reserved, and almost inaccessible, taking no part in the church's politics, and never being called upon for advice; "contemplating," as some one said, "the undoing of what he had spent many years to accomplish."

Smirching the Canal Record

THE high record earned by the War Department in its building of the Panama Canal is temporarily suffering by charges against a civilian employee, John Burke, commissary manager, who is said to have improperly profited to the extent of $50,000 in the turn-over of supplies valued at about $6,000,000. This alleged graft was taken from foreign contractors, and caused no loss to the government. His salary was $4,500. A governmental investigation has been instituted. No War Department official has been involved in the scandal.

Record Land Sale

THE largest private sale of land on record, according to report, was made by the estate of the Duke of Bedford in the transference of over nineteen acres in the heart of London to a Unionist member of Parliament, Henry Mallaby-Deeley. This huge property includes premises occupied by theaters, hotels, the celebrated Bow Street Police Court, the Covent Garden Market, and other businesses, to the total number of 750 buildings. The tract includes over twenty-six streets, and has been the property of the ducal family for hundreds of years. The income is enormous. The estimated price varies from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000, the purchase being made as an investment. This stupendous operation will doubtless be made much of by advocates of land reform in England, although this particular holding is not exactly within the scope of that movement.

MISS RAMONA LEFEVRE
Hostess of the Panama Legation

WASHINGTON is at the beginning of the winter's social and political activities. While the past summer at the national capital was a most unusual one in that so many of the official families, particularly those comprising the congressional contingency, remained in town during the entire heated term, yet in the fashionable West End innumerable handsome homes, which have been barred and boarded all summer, have rapidly assumed signs of life again as the crisp autumn days have come.

All the cabinet families are back in town and are settling themselves in the homes which will probably be their permanent places of abode during the remainder of the present administration. Vice-President and Mrs. Marshall are occupying the commodious and attractive apartment which they have had since the inauguration last March. Mrs. Marshall has remained in the city all summer with the Vice-President, and their simple, unconventional manner of life has made firm friends of everybody who has had the good fortune to meet them. Under Mrs. Bryan's excellent taste Mrs. Logan's famous house at Calumet Place, which the family of the secretary of state has occupied since the early summer, has been transformed into one of the most charming homes of the town. The secretary of the treasury, Mr. McAdoo, has leased a residence in Massachusetts Avenue, where his young daughter, Miss Nona, is beginning to take over on to her young and capable shoulders the arduous duties of chatelaine of a cabinet home. Secretary of War and Mrs. Garrison have taken a long lease on General Bingham's palatial house just off Eighteenth Street in Connecticut Avenue. Postmaster-General Burleson has gone with his family into the historic Phillips house right across from the Metropolitan Club in H Street. Mr. Secretary Daniels took a long lease on the picturesque estate, Single Oak, last spring, and his boys have enjoyed the freedom of the country out there all summer. The residence which the Lanes have occupied in Wyoming Avenue for several years was reconstructed and enlarged during the extended absence of the Secretary and Mrs. Lane while they were on their Western trip in the late summer and fall. It is now delightfully adapted for the hospitalities of a cabinet hostess. The Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Houston are settled in one of the pleasant homes in P Street, and Mr. Secretary of Labor Wilson has taken a house not far from them in the Avenue of the Presidents. The Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Redfield have retained a large apartment at the Highlands, where they made their home while Mr. Redfield was in Congress. The attorney-general, Mr. McReynolds, still retains his bachelor apartment at the Hotel Shoreham.

The members of the diplomatic corps were late in leaving the city in the summer. Several of the ambassadors thought to remain in Washington as long as President Wilson remained, but when they became convinced that Congress would be in session all summer and that the President would stay at the White House until adjournment, the majority of them took their annual flight. The dean of the corps, the scholarly Mr. Jusserand, and his gracious wife went to France for their usual summer outing and have but recently returned to the embassy on Meridian Hill. The Count and Countess von Bernstorff spent the summer near Munich at Bernstorff Villa, where they entertained and were entertained continuously. They returned to the German embassy on Highland Terrace early in November.

LADY SPRING-RICE

COL. A. J. DE FONSECO
Military Attaché, Brazilian Embassy

Much to everybody's regret the affable Italian ambassador, Marquis Cusani, was transferred in August to a European post. Count Vincenzo Macchi di Callere will succeed him and is expected in Washington before the first of the year. The new ambassador is well remembered at our capital, where he was counselor of the embassy from 1903 to 1905. The Countess Macchi was, before her marriage in her native city, Buenos Aires, Señorita Dolores Cabo, and belonged to one of the most distinguished Spanish families of that city. The Austrian ambassador and Mme. Dumba, among the latest additions to the corps went back to Vienna soon after reaching here in the early summer to superintend the reconstruction of an old palace, which they are having remodeled into a country residence. They are now established at the handsome Austrian embassy in Connecticut Avenue. The new British ambassador with Lady Spring-Rice spent the summer at Dublin, N. H., then returned home on account of his health. The Brazilian ambassador and Mme. da Gama spent the summer at Long Branch, while the Russian ambassador and Mme. Bakhmetieff were at Newport, and both families took prominent parts in the gaieties of these fashionable seaside resorts. The Japanese ambassador remained in Washington all through the summer months and was often an interested visitor in the galleries of Congress. Viscountess Chinda went to Japan last spring, and the time of her return is quite uncertain. The newest addition to the list of ambassadors is Señor Don Juan Riano y Gayangos, the Spanish envoy who has the honor of being the first appointee to the new embassy. The members of the diplomatic corps at Washington were more than pleased over the action of the United States Senate on the 19th of June, in passing favorably on the recommendation of the Foreign Relations Committee of that body to raise the American legation at Madrid to ambassadorial rank. Quite an interesting little story of international diplomacy lies back of that action of our Senate. When it became known that King Alfonso would recommend a promotion for his mission at the South American capital an effort was made immediately to secure his approval of the same honor for the Spanish legation at Washington. He consented to this, and a polite diplomatic intimation was given the Department of State at Washington, through the Spanish legation there, that it would be pleasing to Spain if the government of the United States would raise the rank of its mission at Madrid, thereby implying, of course, that in that event Spain would reciprocate by raising the rank of its legation at Washington to an embassy. As is the method of procedure now in all such cases, the State Department conveyed this information to the Committee of Foreign Relations of the Senate, and that committee introduced the resolution which resulted in the enactment of the 19th of June, by which the American legation at Madrid was raised to an embassy. Spain soon took similar steps at Madrid, and then her mission at

The Ministry of Cheer

TEXT: "I exhort you to be of good cheer." Acts 27: 22

WHAT brighter and more beneficent purpose could fill any one's soul at the beginning of the new year than to be the minister of good cheer? In arranging our program for the year, in laying out its plans, I want to urge that we be missionaries of cheerfulness, carrying about with us the radiant rays of hope and the glorious sunshine of grace. We are so often agents of melancholy and depression, and we go about creating heavy atmospheres and increasing the burdensome gloom of human life. In the New Testament the disciples of Jesus are always the ministers of joy; indeed, one of them describes the followers of the Lord as "the children of light." The Lord intends his followers to be as lamps in dark places, the bearers of morning light to the children of darkness.

Listen to the apostle Paul: "I exhort you to be of good cheer." This was the characteristic and constant ministry of the apostle Paul. He moved about in the ways of men a herald of good cheer. When he came into an assembly his very presence brought the ministry of light and air and quickening. His speech was always suggestive of morning. His very severities ended in the simplicities of the dawn. His rebukes terminated in glorious visions. He was an apostle of encouragement, ever feeding smoldering fires, restoring flickering lamps, bringing back a cheery light of hope to the blank and desolate soul. He was an optimist who borrowed his light and flame from the temple and altar of the Most High God. The steady heartening word he spoke at this crisis of the tempest was a familiar sound upon his lips, for whenever he found men despondent, discouraged, losing heart in the long wait of the long fight, this was his inspiriting appeal: "I exhort you to be of good cheer."

The Enemies of Good Cheer

Now this ministry of cheer is always needed in life's voyages, and never more needed than it is to-day. Life is very swift and very intense, and they who run hard are often faint, and they who cannot run hard are often in despair. We take everything impetuously. All things are done at the running pace. Things were never so keen, and therefore there was never more care and depression. On every side people are "run down," and physical collapse is frequently attended by moral and spiritual disaster. But apart altogether from the hot and feverish circumstances of our day, there are the depressions incident to common human life. There is the despondency due to temperament. There is the discouragement created by fierce and gusty circumstances. We have not to seek very far before we come upon people who are down, stale, flat, dispirited, despondent or in despair. Never was there a time when there was greater need than now of the herald of cheerfulness, the optimistic messenger, whose word is music, whose tone is confidence, and whose spirit conveys the energies of the Holy Ghost.

Now, let us cast our eyes around on the familiar life about us, and let us look at some of the people who need the ministry of cheer. First of all I will mention the people who have no confidence in themselves. They are reticent, reserved, shy, retiring, self-depreciatory. They always esteem themselves as nobodies. They regard themselves as incapable of making any contribution to the common good. These are the souls who never worthily measure themselves against imposing tasks. We find them forever saying, "No, I cannot do it; I am not fit for it"; and they feel it, and they mean it; and they remain in their shy seclusion with no just knowledge of their strength. Now, what is needed is some gracious ministry of cheer. They must be discovered to themselves. It is amazing what one man's confidence can do in raising a brother from depression. We may bring our vision to his lack of vision, and our sight will create the requisite movement. Marvelous energy is born of human fellowship. We must use the strong Christian cheer that brings shy souls from "under the fig tree" and gives them confidence to seize the duties which they are quite competent to discharge.

Building New Wills

The second class I will mention are the people who win no prizes. There are the children at school who never return home with medal, or book, or ribbon, or any visible distinction. There are the older people who never win the laurel or wear an earthly crown. These are the good souls who applaud, but are never applauded. They watch the prize-winners, but their own hands are empty, even though they have worked with honest toil. These are hearts that are never comforted by acknowledged triumph, and they are often dispirited and depressed. The lights burn low, and the fire of hope nearly dies out. What is wanted is the ministry of gracious cheer. And what shall we tell them in the name of the Lord? We must tell them that real worth is found in the realm of endeavor and not of achievement. We must tell them that noble effort is noble achievement. The real triumph in life is to be measured by the contribution which our work has made to our character. The dull, honest worker, who has made the acquisition of a fine nobility, goes home with the finest prize.

And then, thirdly, there are the people who live and act at the back of the stage. They fill the small parts of the play. They just stand or sit. They walk in and walk out again. They are the people who form the background for more imposing actors. They are the organ-blowers out of sight. They are the permanent officials who gather all the materials of the cabinet minister's brilliant speech. They constitute that great company who work outside the sphere of the limelight. They are the folk who toil on where the trumpet never sounds. They are the workers on whom we all depend, but whose honest services are rarely sung. They constitute the invisible fidelities on which the solidity of human society so eminently depends. And these folk are often dispirited. They are sometimes despondent concerning the office they fill in the vast organism of common life. What is wanted is a ministry of cheer. We must bring to them the Lord's teaching about the infinite ministry of small fidelities. We must tell them that in the Master's estimate offices are not measured by their prominence but by the fidelity with which they are filled. We must tell them that nothing noble is overlooked by our King. "I know thy works." "My Father who seeth in secret himself shall recompense thee."

And then, fourthly, there are the people who are inclined to measure the possibility of service by the possession of physical robustness. These are the people who are growing old and who begin to think themselves encumbrances in the way. "Their working days are over." They "cannot do much now." They confound retirement with uselessness and the waiting moments with an idle life. And so they are often down and depressed. They need the ministry of Christian cheer. It is a burning shame whenever we allow a veteran to think himself useless. We must tell our old folks that they can bring forth fruit in their old age. Spiritual service is not to be measured by physical strength. We must emphasize the superlative worth of a fine and noble spirit. Our churches are endowed with the sacred help of old men and women whose physical freshness has gone, but whose intercessory interest and services are gloriously abundant. We must cheer the old folk and tell them that, like the Virginia creeper, they can be more resplendently beautiful in the days of their decline.

And, fifthly, there are the people who are in retreat. They are daunted by the austere demands of a noble life. They have become tremulous in the presence of great difficulty, and they are seeking what they think to be the easier parts of the field. They have declared their intention to "give it up." We must bring them the ministry of apostolic cheer. "Up again, old heart!" We must speak a steadying word to those who are shaken by fear. The result of such speech is miraculous. When, in the American Revolution, the young farmers of Connecticut were inclined to desert the army and go home to their fields, it was the strong, serene, heartening word and manner of Washington which made them return in a shame which was transformed into consecrated passion. "Say unto the children of Israel that they go forward."

A Ministry for Us All

And, lastly, there are the people whose hold of the unseen is shaken. They have been overwhelmed by some sudden shock or weakened by the steady invasion of slow calamity. Billow after billow has gone over them like an overwhelming flood, and they are broken and faint. Their hold of the invisible has almost gone. We must bring them the ministry of cheer. What tonic there is at such a time in the confessed and clearly spoken conviction of another man! What steadying power is brought to the timid in the testimony of a steady faith! "I will tell you what he hath done for my soul."

These types and examples might be multiplied in all relationships. The ministry of sacred cheer should be very frequently exercised. It should prevail in the sacred communion of husband and wife and of parent and child. The ministry of apostolic cheer is needed everywhere, in every relationship. And surely the professed disciples of Christ, the church of the living God, should be a society of encouragers, following the example of the Master, comforting his people, "telling good tidings unto Zion," and filling the minds of men as with the cheery presence of the spring.

KING OF THE YEAR

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

I

THE New Year stood on the earth alone
At the dawn of a bitter day,
And he gathered his robe about his feet
In a petulant baby way.
And he said: "I am king of this fine domain,
Of the bustle, and whirr, and hum;
But here I stand on the earth alone.
Why do not my subjects come?"

II

Then a bent form came to the tiny feet,
And bowed with a weary smile:
"I am worn," said he, "and my work is done;
Praise God, I may rest awhile!
But, child, this world is a queer old place,
For nothing is fair and new;
But I wish you luck!" said the grand Old Year;
And he faded away from view.

III

A strong man paused by the lonely spot
Where the New Year stood in the snow.
"I am one of your subjects, sire," quoth he,
"And my way is long to go.
But I pledge a sword to your work and play,
And I give you my heart and breath."
"Ah, who are you?" asked the Baby Year.
And the stranger answered, "Death."

IV

A chubby boy with a merry smile
Came whistling down from on high.
"I am come," cried he, "from the throne of God;
A subject of yours am I.
I give you my arrows sharp and swift,
And a smile from the sky above."
"Ah! what is your name?" asked the small New Year;
And the cherub answered, "Love."

V

Then the New Year stood in the snow alone.
"And I may be king," said he.
"I may rule over the earth and sky,
Over the air and sea;
But two rule ever with me," he said,
"For the merciful God above
Has made them kings of the universe,
And their names are Death and Love."

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, January 4. Matthew 4: 7. "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." "Life is a lottery. You take your chance in it. The world belongs to him who dares. Risk to be a winner!" Where have we heard such counsel? Not in the assembly of the saints; not where men inquire first of all: "Lord, what wouldst thou have me to do?" In the assemblies of the wicked Satan proclaims this Gospel of recklessness and wantonness to tempt men to their ruin.

"Out upon your scruples! Go ahead boldly; there is no danger!" Have we not, in moments of indecision, heard this voice from the abyss that urged us to take the fatal leap into the dark, the unknown? Ay, it has even spoken to us in the language of piety, quoting garbled Scripture, the more to insure our being deceived. It has tried to make our unsanctified boldness to appear as an act of faith. While we are pilgrims in this desert land, the tempter will come to us again. May the clear vision of Christ be imparted to our blind and short-sighted hearts in such moments!

God does not want men to take any risks, but to hear what he says to them, to believe him, and to trust him upon the evidence of his own word. Faith is not blind security that "all will turn out well." Faith is scrupulous attention to God's word. True faith moves within the confines of the divine promises, and is careful not to exceed them. Such faith is rewarded by receiving the divine help in every danger. Lord, be with me when I am tempted to tempt thee!

MONDAY, January 5. Matthew 4: 10. "Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." The tempter had first fought the Captain of our salvation from the cover of God's Word. The weapon which he employed had been turned against him. He now throws it aside. The Bible ultimately proves useless to those who cloak their diabolical mischief with it. But Christ still grasps the trusty weapon. He thrusts at Satan with another text. His omnipotent word, "Get thee hence!" would have sufficed to rid him of the vile spirit. But Christ fights a man's battle for men, to show us the method and the weapons of a Christian's warfare. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." After him, the redeemed must also fight, not against flesh and blood, but against wicked spirits in high places, and to that end must take unto themselves the whole armor of God, especially "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God."

The tempter's last offer reveals his hideous purpose which he had sought to realize from the start. Dethroning God in the hearts of men and enthroning himself therein has been his object since Eve fell. Now, when he is forced to fight the battle of Eden over again with the woman's Seed, he is thwarted in a howling desert by a hungry man to whom he has offered "all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them." Here is matchless obedience to atone for that first disobedience and the fall.

Thou shalt worship God only! May this solemn text loom large before me, when I must wrestle with my adversary! May I never forget that all the cunning devices which he employs to ingratiate himself with me tend only to absolute apostasy. He wants to be my God and make me his servant and worshiper. O Christ, teach me to say: "Get thee hence!"

TUESDAY, January 6. John 1: 38, 39. "What seek ye? Come and see." The Master's greeting to his first disciples. In this simple manner was begun that long and fruitful companionship which was filled up with so many absorbing conversations on the deepest and most momentous subjects. When Jesus meets an inquirer, that is indeed a most august event. It would deserve to be heralded with the blare of trumpets and with the admiring acclaim of multitudes. But the kingdom of God cometh not with observation. Quietly, without the least ostentation, the Lord turns to those who desire to have converse with him. Condescendingly he meets men on their own level, in the homeliest way.

The Baptist had pointed the Master out to Andrew and John. Their interest in him had thus been aroused. It might have vanished again. But the Master appropriates that interest. He invites them to him. From hearing about him they are advanced to hearing him. And to the initiative he took on that day they owed it that they became his disciples.

They came, they saw, and they were conquered. It cannot have been anything that attracts men in a natural and worldly way that made those hours of conversation with Jesus ever memorable to these two men. The Son of man had not where he might lay his head. He did not own his lodging. Likely it was scantily furnished. So much the better; for now their whole attention must have been centered on the singular person of their remarkable Host. They saw and heard and spoke with Jesus. He gave them the opportunity for knowing and appreciating him which they had craved. They came away satisfied that he was the Messiah.

Come and see, ye doubting and halting. The door is open for you. By the call of his Gospel the Redeemer invites you to-day as effectually as he personally invited men in the days of his flesh. There is verily no reason why you should not be his disciples, except your own unwillingness. Let him overcome that for you.

WEDNESDAY, January 7. John 1: 42. "Thou art Simon the son of Jona: thou shalt be called Cephas." It must have been a glad day when Andrew knew that another son had been born to his father Jona. With his brother Simon he spent the days of his childhood, youth, and early manhood on the shores of Lake Tiberias. The two must have been true brothers, sharing each others' confidence, knowledge, aspirations, joys, and sorrows. But a greater day came when Andrew brought his brother Simon to the Master, and received from him a brother believer, a brother apostle, a brother Cephas.

Christ takes men at what they are and makes them what they shall be. If Andrew had had any misgivings as to the suitableness of his impulsive, aggressive, and, again, wavering brother for the discipleship with the gentle but firm Jesus, they were dispelled by the Lord's promise that he would mold and shape Simon into a Cephas, a rock-man, firm at length in his faith and his profession of the Master whom he was yet to deny.

The Lord, who is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, gauges each person that comes to him, but not for the purpose of admitting him to discipleship on his merit, nor for the purpose of establishing a priority of rank, a primacy, among his followers, but in order to assure each that he will make him apt and thoroughly furnished for his peculiar work in the kingdom. All our strength is from him who called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace. Let us walk worthily and stir up the gift that is in us.

THURSDAY, January 8. John 1: 43. "Follow me." Philip had not gone to seek Jesus. Jesus "found" him. Here is the invitation he gave Philip. It is brief but comprehensive. Following Jesus, that is the life occupation of a disciple.

The ways by which Christ gains followers are not stereotyped. There is indeed in every instance the call by the word of grace, but the occasions upon which the call is issued, and the circumstances which accompany it, differ vastly. Christ comes not only to people who are seeking him, but he approaches also such as are not seeking him at all, are not even thinking of him. Many a soul has heard itself challenged by this summons: "Follow me!" while engaged in its common everyday routine of labor.

Discipleship is never forced upon a person. The call of God's grace creates that faith which prompts men to willingly follow Jesus. Philip might have consulted with flesh and blood, and flesh and blood would surely have counseled him to decline the invitation. There was no promise of any sort connected with the summons. His entrance into the circle of Jesus' disciples must rather have entailed earthly sacrifices from the start. Herein, then, is seen the power of genuine faith—which is essentially obedience—that Philip promptly casts his lot with the Stranger who bids him come, and starts out to share his fortunes, whatever they may prove to be. He trusted the arranging of his entire future to this Man to whom he gave his confidence simply upon the Man's word. He followed him to the cross, and thence to the crown.

"Follow me!" Has not this call sounded in my ears? Ay, perhaps oftener than you are ready to admit. Will you not obey it?

FRIDAY, January 9. John 1: 47. "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile." Another trophy of a disciple's young faith, Nathanael stands before Jesus. Philip has brought him. He had found him a skeptic who ridiculed the idea that the Messiah should come out of despised Nazareth. Philip had calmly pitted the strength of his faith against the power of Nathanael's reasonable prejudice. "Come and see"—that was all he had said. He did not propose to convince his friend by formidable logic. He was sure that the direct contact with Jesus would accomplish what Philip could not hope to accomplish by the most elaborate argument. Let us try the same method with our skeptically disposed friends. If they will only risk themselves to come where they may be convinced, that is all we desire.

And now this character-estimate by the Master as he sees Nathanael coming! "An Israelite indeed" he calls him—a prince among God's people, a wrestler with God in prayer, like Jacob of old. Guileless of heart he declares him—a sincere, candid person, conscious of his own faults like the contrite publican, not puffed up with self-conceit like the haughty Pharisee, open to this Stranger's argument as he had been to his friend's entreaty. Thus God had prepared Nathanael for the message of his Son.

Nathanael is awed by the Master's knowledge of him. A person who can say those things of him, he feels, must know him through and through. Jesus answers his startled question: "Whence knowest thou me?" by another manifestation of his omniscience: He has watched Nathanael's solitary meditation and wrestling beneath the fig-tree. Jesus is about us and observant of us, when we are not aware of it. We are made to know of his presence later, when it is good for us to be told that his eyes have been upon us all the time for our guidance.

SATURDAY, January 10. John 1: 51. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man." Jacob's dream at Bethel carried a deeper meaning than the patriarch apprehended at the time. The ladder which he beheld joining earth to heaven, and the lively communication which he saw going on up and down its rounds, prefigured the union between God and man which occurred in the incarnation of the Son of God. Jesus is the ladder which God has let down upon this earth that men might mount upward to their heavenly home. Through Jesus we have access to the Father. He is the way: no one cometh to the Father but by him. The busy angels whom Jacob saw going and coming on incessant errands signified heaven's interest in the work which the Son of God was to perform as the Son of man. It is a work "which the angels desire to look into."

Nathanael had been struck with the mysterious knowledge which Jesus had revealed concerning Nathanael's private affairs. This had drawn from him the acknowledgment that Jesus was "the Son of God and the King of Israel." Jesus accepts this testimony, but declares that there is a sublimer foundation for it than Nathanael had so far discovered. The open heaven, the free approach to the Father secured for men by Jesus, the constant intercourse that is going on, wherever the Gospel of Jesus is proclaimed, between the world that now is and that which is to come—verily, verily, these facts represent the greater glory of the ministry of Jesus. For they are not, like the miracles, chiefly manifestations of the divine power, but they lift the hearts of men out of their groveling existence here below and cause them to dwell, in a spirit of faith, amid heavenly things, enjoying even now in anticipation their heavenly citizenship. Jesus shall be the ladder by which my faith, in daily prayer and finally in the hour of death, ascends to God.

A Year of Thoughtfulness

A NEW YEAR seems to be a very big thing. We are apt to be staggered at the thought of it. Three hundred and sixty-five days in one great consignment from the Almighty. We think of the many things that were packed into last year—its laughter, its tears, its successes, its defeats, its beginnings of new friendships, its sad breakings of old ties. And we know that the year ahead will have much the same succession of varied experience.

Thinking of the New Year as a big thing and the passing from the old year to the new as a big event, we are apt to make many high resolves, so many and so high that the first weeks of the year find them shattered. This time suppose we approach the year before us in a somewhat different spirit. You have noticed that the New Year is represented in art as a very small thing, a baby or a tiny boy. That is because the year begins in such a small way. First, it is only a second old, then ten seconds, soon a minute, then an hour, then a day. All the time we are speaking of it as a "new year," it is very young, and so very small.

Suppose this year, instead of thinking of some tremendous or startling thing we are going to do, we make up our minds to try a little thing; to try it during the first minutes of the new year and to keep on trying it as the days and hours pass.

Much first-class talent, much excellent character, many sound principles are brought to naught through thoughtlessness. "I didn't think" is the excuse heard more often, perhaps, than any other; and it is always a dreadfully poor excuse rather than the good one we have believed it to be. We ought to have thought. This year let's be thoughtful.

In matters of religion and of duty to others there is the deepest need of thoughtfulness. For one's own sake it is much better to feel unselfish than to feel selfish, but so far as results go, a man might almost as well be unjust and cruel as to fail through thoughtlessness to bring his unselfish feeling up to the point of actual service.

We form habits of forcing our minds to think of others at certain times or in certain surroundings, but if we begin prayerfully and with determination, we can train our minds so that automatically and well-nigh constantly they shall think of others rather than of self. Before beginning to speak you will think: "Will these words of mine interest, or please, or help, the person or persons I am talking with?" Before every act there will come that query: "Will it help?" Another's comfort, another's pleasure, another's welfare—these will be the considerations as the moments pass. This is the kind of a life Paul was thinking about when he urged: "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." It is a little thing to do, but it is in truth the kind of a thing that is turning the world upside down.

There never was a time when so much was being said about unselfish living; never a time when so many people were trying to live that sort of a life; never a time when such mighty things were being done for the comfort, the enlightenment, the uplift of multitudes. You have determined to bear your part in this great brotherhood of service. You have asked Christ to so change and strengthen your soul that you shall be equipped for it. Now do not throw all this away just by being thoughtless.

A Happy New Year? There will be times when thoughtfulness of others will make you sad, because when one looks for them one finds so many heart-breaking things in the lives of others. But even so, this is the way to have a truly happy year, a year that will seem happy when it has grown old, a year which, because in it we have made others happy, will shine out through eternity as a year of joy.

The Carabao Incident

SOLDIERS and sailors who have served in the wars are not usually paragons of politeness, and when they are at their revels, their playfulness is not always couched in complimentary language. Some fifteen years ago a camp ditty sprang up in the Philippines. This composition, which was probably the effort of some regimental song-writer, was known as "The Insurrectos Song." It referred to the unreconstructed Filipinos in terms of wofully blunt condemnation. In Washington lately, at an annual dinner, the Carabao Club—a military organization of which the President is an honorary member—sang this song, and it seems to have given so much offense that there is talk of an official investigation with the prospect of courts martial in the background. The President, who was not present at the dinner, has resigned his honorary membership, and Secretary Daniels of the Navy has announced that the "Insurrectos Song" should never be sung again under the present administration with officers of the navy present. Army and navy officers are admonished to be careful in future not to give the Filipinos, who are our dependents, any cause for resentment, especially in view of the fact that we are endeavoring to show a generous spirit toward them and are training them for ultimate self-government. Common sense and the spirit of American loyalty should have prevented what has turned out to be an awkward predicament for the army and navy officers, and a reprimand under the circumstances was practically inevitable, although the affair will very likely blow over without the more serious ordeal of a court martial.

The Land Question in Mexico

WHEN General Villa, the rebel commander in Mexico, issued his decree confiscating the vast estates of the Creel and Terrazas families in behalf of the people, he let in a light which strikes very close to the heart of the real problem in that republic. One must go deeper than the news in the daily press to find the cause of the troubles in Mexico, and the reason for the continued unrest, out of which has sprung the apparently endless succession of revolutions in that country. It is the old evil of the absorption of the land and the exploitage of the common people by clever and unscrupulous men, singly and in combination. In Mexico, out of a total population of about 14,000,000, over 70 per cent. are illiterate. Of the 6,000,000 native Indians a very small fraction is civilized. Up to the time of Benito Juarez, Mexico was bound hand and foot with an ironclad concordat; the church was the state and the state was the church. Ecclesiasticism was supreme and worked hand in hand with its friends and supporters among the rich classes, who exploited the country at will. The last fifty years, while they have seen a measure of improvement, have not materially bettered social conditions among the masses of the Mexican people, who are now fighting for a chance for themselves and their children. They want the land and the right to share in its products. At the present time seven hundred patrician families own practically the whole of agricultural Mexico. The people also want the total abolition of peonage, which is simply slavery. They want primary schools, which, in hundreds of districts, are now unknown. They want a voice in the government, which till now has been denied them, their slightest protest resulting in imprisonment or worse. All these years they have had no opportunity to make good, and what little improvements, social and economic, have taken place have only whetted the desire for things still better. They had a glimpse of greater possibilities during Madero's administration; but these were swept away by the rise of Huerta. It is their struggle for the realization of these hopes that has won for them the sympathy of lovers of progress and justice everywhere.

Protected by the Flag

THERE was a sudden halt in the battle between the Mexican Federals and Constitutionalists at Monterey on the afternoon of October 23. All day long the fight had raged. Machine guns and rifle fire swept the city streets. In an old Mexican residence, right in the line of fire, lived an American family named Stockhouse, whose members found shelter in a wardrobe, where they huddled together, weak from hunger and thirst, and in momentarily increasing danger. Suddenly, before the eyes of the astonished combatants, there appeared a girl of fourteen, Elsie Stockhouse. She dashed out of the house with an American flag wrapped around her slender shoulders, and the firing halted as she ran through the center of the mêlée toward the American consulate a few blocks off. The bewildered soldiers, saluting her with cries of "Viva la señorita Americana!" opened a line to let her pass. In a few moments the entire family were conveyed to a place of safety. Both armies recognized and respected the flag, and during the fierce fighting that followed not a single shot struck any house where "Old Glory" was exposed. It was the symbol of protection and safety, and as such was recognized by all nationalities in Monterey.

There is a sequel to Miss Stockhouse's brave deed, that is explained in the following letter and is of special interest to CHRISTIAN HERALD readers:

I inclose a graphic account, cut from the Temple Telegram, of the escape of my daughter and grandchild from a fierce battle at Monterey. I thought it would interest THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to know that the flag with which they were covered is one that was presented to Elsie by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for getting subscribers. We feel that it was not through accident, but providence that the flag was in their home and protected them in safety, enabling them to reach the consulate. We all love THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. We have read it many years. The Lord has blessed it and our prayers are for it to go on its glorious mission.

MRS. JESSIE LEGGAT.

Temple, Texas.

Our readers will join with us in the appreciation of this heroic action of a young American girl, who showed courage and patriotism of the highest order, and whose confidence in the protecting power of her country's flag should be an object lesson to Americans everywhere. The flag could have been put to no nobler purpose than the protection of the defenseless and the saving of human life.

The Crops of 1913

ONE of the most instructive indications of national prosperity is found in the growth of the country's annual agricultural output. In its final estimate of the production and value of fourteen important crops, which go far toward making the grand total of our agricultural output for the current year, the Bureau of Crop Statistics in Washington has just issued some remarkable figures. The value of the year's farm products and livestock at the present time aggregates $9,000,000, on the basis of prices paid on December 1. The fourteen crops specifically mentioned are only a part of the whole. They include corn, $1,692,000,000; winter wheat, $433,995,000; spring wheat, $176,127,000; all wheat, $610,124,000; oats, $439,506,000; barley, $95,731,000; rye, $26,220,000; buckwheat, $11,445,000; flaxseed, $21,399,000; rice, $22,600,000; potatoes, $227,903,000; sweet potatoes, $432,884,000; hay, $797,071,000; tobacco, $121,597,000; cotton, $797,841,000; sugar beets, $34,420,000. The total increase in the fourteen crops over last year is $182,958,000 and more than $359,000,000 over 1911. In some localities the crops have been lower than usual on account of drought, yet the general increase, notwithstanding all drawbacks, is most encouraging.

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

CONDUCTED BY FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Central Park's Shepherd Retires

JAMES CONWAY, who has been an employee and resident in Central Park, New York City, for over fifty years, and has had charge of the sheep of the park consecutively for thirty-seven years, retired the other day from active service, and it is likely that the park commissioners will vote him a pension for the rest of his days. A young Irish immigrant of seventeen, Conway started work with the first squads that began to clear away the tangled wood in the preparation of Central Park. The territory laid out for it was thick native woods, with swamps and muddy trails. The city ran into the country at Forty-second Street. Conway, after aiding the gardeners, was placed in care of the menagerie, and afterward of the park flock. As shepherd he was widely known and warmly loved. It is said that many rich bankers and merchants and distinguished professional leaders, as well as humbler folk, were frequently carried in his arms when they were children to get a better look at the sheep, and now they in turn send their children to be carried by the old shepherd. In the nature of his calling, and in his fidelity to it, he copied the One who said:

I am the good Shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine. (John 10: 14.)

Peanut Crop Very Valuable

SINCE the early sixties the culture and consumption of the peanut have grown to large proportions. More than seven million bushels of homegrown peanuts are annually consumed by Americans at a cost of $14,300,000. Virginia, and especially Suffolk County, takes the lead in this particular industry. Possibly the finest peanut grown is the "bunch" variety, but the Virginia "running" is the most widely known. The pods are large and white and will weigh twenty-two pounds to the bushel. Selects from these are called "jumbo." Tennessee produces the white and red nuts, both of which are excellent. The nuts in North Carolina are of the African variety, small and full of oil, but pleasant to the taste. Some think Africa is the original home of the peanut, but the best authorities say that its native land is Brazil. Most of the peanut crop is eaten by the people between meals. From the nut a valuable oil is pressed. The oil cakes are used for food for men and cattle, and the quantities that are left in the earth after the harvest are dug up and devoured by large herds of swine which fatten on them. Nuts were included in the list of presents Jacob sent to the premier in Egypt, who held his boy.

And Israel said, Take of the best fruits in the land in your vessels, and carry down the man a present, a little balm, and a little honey, spices, and myrrh, nuts, and almonds. (Gen. 43: 11.)

Marriage Proposal Girdles Globe

HARRY T. PLUNKETT left San Francisco for Topeka, Kan., recently to marry a young lady to whom he had proposed by letter over a year ago. But the letter had not reached her till a day or two before he started to claim his bride. Two years ago Plunkett met Miss Forrest at Topeka and fell in love with her. Soon afterward the young woman started on a tour around the world. Having delayed his proposal before she started on her trip, Plunkett concluded to make it by letter. She kept going and the letter halted at places she had visited and left, and never overtook her till she reached home. She promptly said "Yes," and he took the next train to claim her. The tie that binds real lovers is strong and persistent. It is patient and true under adverse circumstances, and fastens hearts as one, and fashions the home, the fountain of ideal happiness. This earthly affection is the offspring of the One who said:

I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with lovingkindness have I drawn thee. (Jer. 31: 3.)

False Report Caused Bankruptcy

JUDGE HAND of the United States Circuit Court suspended sentence against a public accountant who had been convicted of perjury, under a bail of $5,000, that he might spend a day with his family and return the next morning for the announcement of his penalty. The accountant had sworn to a report of the financial condition of a certain cloak and suit maker to the bankruptcy department of the court, indicating that the man was insolvent. It seems that the man was perfectly sound financially, and proved the fact to the satisfaction of the court. But the evil report of the accountant caused a run of creditors on the merchant and drove him into involuntary bankruptcy, and the man who had done the irreparable injury was prosecuted and convicted. Many a bank and business establishment, and individuals in good financial condition, have been ruined by the whispered breath of suspicion. Reputations more valuable than money are sometimes wrecked by the foul tongue of slander. What crime more base than that of undermining confidence, of bankrupting a good name by falsehood? Against the destruction of material or moral values by false witnessing the earthly court rendered sentence against the accountant, and one of the ten commandments measures God's hatred of this sin in these words:

Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor. (Ex. 20: 16.)

STOLEN "MONA LISA" FOUND

AFTER more than two years of search, "Mona Lisa," Leonardo da Vinci's great painting, which was stolen from the Louvre in Paris, was found in Florence, December 10, and Vincenzo Perugia, the thief, was placed under arrest. Perugia claimed that his motive was revenge for the art and other treasures which Napoleon I. took from Italy to Paris. The French people say that after Napoleon's downfall the art treasures were returned to Italy, and that the "Mona Lisa" had been secured from the painter himself by Francois I. for an amount of $15,000. Its loss was counted a national calamity, and the finding of the picture has produced world-wide joy. The French Government gave permission for public exhibitions of the recovered picture at Florence and Rome. In the gallery at Florence on an easel between the portraits of Raphael and Titian, the "Mona Lisa," in a carved and gilded 16th century frame, was placed. Parties of one hundred each were permitted to enter the gallery and spend three minutes viewing the picture. Up to one o'clock, December 14, when the gallery closed, 30,000 people had witnessed the magic smile, and many thousands were turned away disappointed. The world is far from being lost in materialism and avarice when a little paint and cloth, touched by an immortal genius into a living form, can so stir two great nations. The genius of the painter, an emanation of the Deity, calls to mind these words: "There is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." (Job 32: 8.)

Sun Worshiper Leader Convicted

THE leader of the Sun Worshipers in this country, numbering 14,000, was found guilty the last of November in the United States Court in Chicago on the charge of sending illegal matter through the mails in the form of the creed of the cult. The maximum penalty is five years in the penitentiary and $5,000 fine. About the only evidence the government used in the prosecution of the case was the contents of the book itself. The assistant district attorney said: "This verdict not only is important in that it spells doom for the Mazdaznan cult, but it is the handwriting on the wall for all such cults which feed on the culpability of men and women who are snared by their mysticisms and fake occult powers." The Federal and State authorities should insist upon a more careful censorship of the obscenities that push themselves so boldly into some of the papers, books and plays of our time, which, under the pretense of making evil more repulsive, in fact render it more alluring. The verdict is in harmony with the words of the apostle:

Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report: if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things. (Phil. 4: 8.)

Flagman Killed Saving Others

PHILIP DELEO, who had for fifteen years guarded the gate of the West Shore Railroad crossing at Ridgefield Park, N. J., was killed in rescuing a mother and child from death the other evening. Deleo raised the gates and let the woman and her child go over the track; but the woman, bewildered in some way, started back and the gateman, seeing her peril, ran to her, raised her and the child in his arms, and carried them over the tracks again. At that instant the belated train arrived, and bore the man down. The blow and his effort pitched the woman and child from his arms to safety several feet away. Deleo lived frugally, supported a wife and two sons in Italy, and had saved a modest provision for a rainy day. He had fixed on the first of next April as the day set to go back, and, with his family, enjoy the fruit of his industry and loyalty to duty. When we search the records of history for heroes who have led armies or ruled nations, we must not forget the humble ones like this gateman hero, who spent his days guarding others, and then freely gave up his life to save others, in imitation of the One of whom it was said:

Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many. (Matt. 20: 28.)

Plan to Teach Prisoners

ARRANGEMENTS were recently made by the jail board of Baltimore, Md., for starting a night school for long-term male prisoners, and the assistant superintendent of public instruction will visit the jail once a week and do the teaching. It is stated that the Maryland Prisoners' Aid Society will obtain teachers for other nights from the Young Men's Christian Association. A month or so previous to the opening of this school for the long-term men, there was started a similar one for the female prisoners. It is held every Saturday afternoon. The warden of the prison interviews the prisoners and ascertains what course of study each one would prefer. This is one of the least hopeful fields for reformatory work, but it must not be neglected. How merciful this educational provision, and how helpful morally! It ought to be extensively adopted by prison authorities, not leaving out the Gospel message so necessary to moral regeneration. What striking contrast is this teaching to the rough treatment of prisoners, even to the point of murder, which is now commanding the attention and action of some grand juries! Christ knew how deep was the pain caused by the loss of liberty and good name, and commanded his followers to be kind in their treatment of prisoners. The psalmist thus expresses the divine solicitude for the unfortunate:

For the Lord heareth the poor, and despiseth not his prisoners. (Ps. 69: 33.)

THE MAN WITH A PEDIGREE

BY IRVING BACHELLER

SOME said that the big hotel was a godsend to the little community of Blueberry Lake, but they were mistaken as to the name of the sender. It was an object lesson in idleness and extravagance. It brought to that happy village dreams of wealth and of money made without labor. The women began to be ashamed of their sunbonnets, and the men of their cowhide boots. The boys and girls "dressed up" every evening and walked the streets, idling and seeing life. The men began to wear collars and rebellious neckties. Prices went up at the stores, because the city folks had laughed at the cheapness of things and the merchants did not want to be ridiculous. A number of the dozen tradesmen got automobiles, while their neighbors, mostly mill-hands and small farmers, got discouragement and disjointed tempers.

All kinds of people had been coming into the village and stimulating a great variety of thought and reflection in its inhabitants, when, one day in October, after the big hotel had closed, a new kind of human puzzle arrived at the Wilderness Inn. That was the one hotel in Blueberry Lake which was always open. The town was ripe for him. He was a big, fleshy, well-dressed man with a gray moustache. For two days the only information he offered about himself was the name which he had rapidly, and not too legibly, inscribed on the register:

"Joseph Henderson Foot, Boston, Mass."

Mr. Foot sat comfortably on the veranda, making notes in a memorandum book, or sauntered through the streets and out upon the pretty road, and said nothing unless he were spoken to. Then he answered in a tone of gentle deference and broke off the conversation so gradually and tenderly that you couldn't see where it ended. He was what they called, in that part of the country, a "pleasant man." He rose every morning with the sun, and sat writing letters until eight o'clock. "Early to bed and early to rise," was his motto, he said. He loved work; "it kept one out of mischief."

The first Sunday after his arrival he went to church, and made a nice little speech to the children in the Sabbath school. Henry Saunders, who kept the inn, naturally wanted to know his business, and opened a conversation with that end in view.

"I see you come from Boston," was the careless assertion of Saunders after the first words of greeting.

"Oh, yes; I couldn't live far from the gilded dome."

"Lived there long?"

"Ever since 1621."

"Then," as Saunders explained to his friends the next day, "he showed me his pedigree all wrote out on a card, an' it was longer than the pedigree of Billy Van Brocklin's trottin' hoss, that's tacked up in the livery stable."

Saunders had asked the stranger if he were traveling for some Boston house, and Foot had said: "Not exactly; I'm in the mining business—Alaskan gold. Came here for rest—little run down, you know."

This gentleman was the agent of great wealth lying unearned and awaiting distribution in sundry Alaskan barrens. His stock of old-fashioned manly virtue was quite as inexhaustible as the gold in his mine, and he could show choice specimens of the gold and the virtues. Saunders had always said that he didn't believe in that kind of a man. But he lied, and he knew it. He was deeply impressed. The landlord wanted some information, but had to struggle along without it for several weeks, while Mr. Foot improved his acquaintance with the children and dogs of Blueberry Lake. Finally he got it one day as the two sat together in the office.

Mr. Foot had one mine that was paying fifty thousand dollars a month. Not a share of the stock was for sale. It was all owned by himself and a few of his friends. He was about to develop another property which was better, in his opinion. One carload of small stone and gravel, taken near the surface, had produced seven hundred dollars to the ton; assays showed that the deposit increased in richness the farther they went down. About all the stock which they cared to sell had been taken by friends of his, but the company needed a little more capital and he had just been notified that he could sell twenty thousand shares at par.

Saunders came nearer, with the look of one who sees the promised land after much wandering, and yet has some fear of putting his foot in it.

"I mean every word I say," said Foot with a look of dry solemnity.

"Le's go an' set down in the parlor upstairs; we'll be all by ourselves," said Saunders with a wink.

They went and sat down side by side.

"I am going to offer to the citizens of this village 20,000 shares of my Alaskan Consolidated Company at par—one dollar a share—which is the ground floor of the proposition, absolutely," Mr. Foot began in a confidential manner. "We own more gold to the cubic foot than any other mine in the world. A glance at this report will convince you of that. It is written on the ground, by John Mulcasey, the most expert mining engineer in America. For more than ten years he was in the employ of the United States Government."

"AIN'T YE GOT ANY PRIDE, MAN? D'YE THINK YER DEPENDENCE IS ANYTHING TO REJOICE OVER?"

Painted by M. Stockton Mulford

The report confirmed Mr. Foot's claim in a convincing tone of professional calmness. But Mr. Mulcasey had neglected to say that while the claim was rich in gold it was so remote that the expense of transporting and erecting machinery destroyed every promise of the enterprise.

"I wouldn't mind taking a little of it myself," said Saunders.

"And if you'll take hold and help me, for I don't want to work too hard, I'll make it easy for you," the genial Mr. Foot proposed. "You take a thousand shares and give me a check for half of it, and pay me the remainder out of the dividends. In consideration of these terms you are to introduce me to your fellow citizens, and I'll do the rest. In that way you'll be doing them and yourself a favor."

Saunders accepted the proposition, and so the trouble began.

The first man they appealed to was Mr. Solomon Plum, who had four gum and candy stores in as many villages of the north country. Solomon was a slender, snug little man, as neat as a new stick of candy. Amos Gladden's wife said that he always looked as if he were fixed up to have his picture taken.

Every savings bank within two hundred miles of this prosperous merchant had some of his money at interest. He was often referred to in the neighborhood as "a certain rich man"—a phrase which covers or discovers a multitude of sins. It is a good idea, under proper circumstances, to be a rich man, but one should beware of being a certain rich man, for that means that his reputation among his neighbors is none too savory.

He stood behind his counter when Saunders and Foot called to see him. He listened politely while the diffuser of wealth unfolded his plans, as a result of which the careful and prosperous Plum made a small investment in mining stock. The latter's neighbors fell before the genial Foot like wheat in the path of the reaper. In ten days he had twenty notes in his pocket, all dated at Blueberry Lake, and each bore the signature of a leading citizen. The notes were for varying sums, the least being $200.

There was only one man in the community of any substance who had firmly resisted the lure of sudden wealth—Amos Gladden, an ex-guide, who owned a small farm near the village, and had prospered by reason of his thrift and industry and good sense. Three of his neighbors had called to see what was the matter with Amos. One of them was Saunders, who kept the inn. They were on the road to wealth and did not want Amos to be left behind. He listened to their arguments but stood firm. One of them lost patience and begged him not to be a fool.

"Wal, boys, I expect I'm a fool, but I can't help it—no fool ever could help it," said Amos. "I've been a fool so long I've kind o' got the habit, an' it agrees with me."

"But here's the chance of a lifetime to put yerself an' yer family above want," said one of them.

"We enjoy wantin' things," said Amos. "There's a lot o' fun in it. When ye stop wantin' things, ye ain't got nothin' left to be thankful fer an' might as well be dead."

"But you don't want to work hard all yer life!"

"Wal, if you're all goin' to be millionaires, the man who does the work won't have much competition an' can name his own wages, and I can use that for rejoicin', come New Year's."

"Ain't ye got any pride, man? D'ye think yer dependence is anything to rejoice over?" Mr. Saunders inquired.

"Pride—sure! The chance has come fer me to be the one an' only fool in this village, an' I'm goin' to improve it an' thank the Lord fer it."

"You're a thousand years behind the times. Folks don't git up at four o'clock in the mornin' an' work till dark any more, if they pretend to be anybody."

"Which I don't," said Amos, now a bit nettled by their solicitude. If there's any pertendin' to be done around here, you fellows can do it. Ye can even pertend to know my business better'n I do, but I hate to see ye so anxious 'bout it. 'T'ain't nat'ral. Neighbors ain't apt to be that way. Fact is, you ain't convinced; you're uneasy 'bout this gold mine stock, an' what you want is comp'ny."

"I'm just as sure o' makin' a fortune as I am that the sun shines," said one of the Good Samaritans, as he rose, with a look of indignation.

"But you ain't convinced," said Amos. "You're jest tryin' to be convinced—that's all. If you knew that you had a fortune within yer grasp ye wouldn't be gittin' mad at me 'cause I don't take a part of it. You ain't thought o' one thing, I guess: There's tens o' millions in New York layin' idle, an' the smartest brains in America are lookin' fer a chance to invest 'em at 4 per cent. a year on good security. If this 'ere man had a mountain o' real gold and could prove it, do you suppose he'd be comin' to Blueberry Lake fer capital an' takin' your notes for it, due a year from date?"

"He's a friend of Mr. Saunders, an' some of the best men in America are behind him. It's only a favor that he's sellin' this stock to us."

"Oh, then he's jest a kind of an angel, goin' around an' doin' good," said Amos. "Excuse me, but I never yet seen a man doin' that as a business. He may have wings, but I'd want to see how they was j'ined on to his body—I would. Angels don't have to go so fur to use their capital. There's plenty places more handy an' more in need of it than Blueberry Lake, if a feller can b'lieve the papers. If he's a real genuine angel lookin' fer a chance to give away money, why does he take the trouble to sell these 'ere minin' stocks? Why don't he cut off the business end of it an' hand over the greenbacks right away? I'll bet if one o' you fellers was to ask him to lend ye fifty dollars he'd turn red in the face. This millionaire angel of yours would say he was sorry, but a little short an' couldn't spare it."

They withdrew, and were the soberest looking three men in Hamilton County. The task of convincing Amos was too much for them.

"Consarn him! He's made me feel uneasy with all his talk o' being thankful fer what he's got an' not graspin' for more," said one of them, as they rode away.

"Saunders, how long have you knowed this 'ere man?"

"Only ten days."

"What! I thought he was an old friend o' yourn."

"Wal, to tell ye the truth, I got to thinkin' so myself," said Saunders.

"Wal, sir, I wouldn't wonder if we'd been took in, an' I wish I was out of it."

"Me, too," said another. "I guess I'll back out an' ask him fer my note."

"If you do—I will," said the other; "see if I don't."

"If he gives 'em up, I'll believe in him an' let him keep mine," said Saunders, the innkeeper. "It'll prove that he means what he says."

They agreed on a spokesman, and drove to the inn in a gloomy silence.

The genial man with the pedigree sat on the veranda as they returned. Saunders and one rode back to the stables, while the "spokesman" sat down with the mine owner. The spokesman perspired freely as he stated his case. He had no doubt it was a good thing, but had decided that he had better not go into it just now. His health was not very good, and he was afraid that he would not be able to pay his note.

"And you wish to back out?" the great mine owner inquired, with an accusing and reproachful look.

"Yes—three of us have made up our minds that we had better not go into it."

"I should like to oblige you very much indeed, but I never do business in that way!" said the man from Boston.

The angel had fallen. He had suddenly become a business man. Moreover, he did not use charity in any form.

The spokesman went to the stable and reported that the back-out proposition would not work.

"Amos is the only smart man in this village," he said; le's go back an' git his advice."

"But we've gone an' elected him the biggest fool in Blueberry Lake," said Saunders with a laugh.

"That's so, but I, fer one, am ready to ask him to resign in my favor," the spokesman answered.

They drove out the back way and hurried to the home of Amos.

"We've come to apologize," said Saunders. "If you ever want to be elected President of the United States, I'll vote fer ye, and we'd sort o' like the same flavor in our New Year's dinner as you like t' have in yours."

"That's all right about the dinner, but as fer the President business, I guess I'd ruther be the leadin' fool in Blueberry Lake," said Amos; "there's more fun in it."

"Wal, you've improved a good deal in the last hour," said the spokesman. "We've decided that you're the only smart man in the village."

"You'll have to guess ag'in," said Amos. "I believe Mr. Foot is still here."

"But you're a better judge of angels than we are—that's sure," said Saunders. "He's been so good to us we thought we'd do him a favor. So we offered to swap the stock for the notes, an' he wouldn't do it. I guess it's a reg'lar suction game."

"We'll have to try to buy the notes," said Amos.

"I wouldn't wonder if he'd sent 'em away," said Saunders.

"Sent 'em away—nonsense!" said Amos. "He'll sell 'em right here, an' in Sur'nac an' Elizabethtown, where you're known—every one of 'em. Nobody would touch 'em with a ten-foot pole in Boston. You tell him I've got a little money in the bank, an' if he'll come an' see me, mebbe I'll buy two or three o' them notes. I'll try to save ye something. What he wants is cash."

That very afternoon the genial mine owner called to see Amos. He wanted to sell any or all of the notes.

"There's some o' these men that ain't satisfied with the stock," said Amos. "They want to get their notes back, don't they?"

"Yes, but I have told them that I don't do business in that way."

"But there's something else in the world besides business," Amos insisted.

"Yes, and who is to pay me for my time and work in making those deals?"

"You say the stock is worth more than you ask for it."

"That's so, but we can't run a company without stockholders, and a deal is a deal. In other words, business is business. I keep my agreements with other people, and it's only fair that other people should keep their agreements with me."

"I've got some land that I'll trade ye for them notes," Amos proposed.

"I never buy real estate," said Mr. Foot; "it's against my principles."

There were many things that Mr. Foot never did.

"I've got some money, but not enough to do much good," said Amos. "I know a man up at Newberry Falls who'll mebbe go in with me an' buy some o' them notes, if we can agree on the price. You git Saunders to take us up with his autymobile an' we'll see about it."

This latter suggestion was intended simply as a mild encouragement to a home industry.

So it happened that Saunders, who had in his livery one of the "autymobiles" of Blueberry Lake, set out with Foot and Amos on the lonely forest road to Newberry Falls. They ran into a small blizzard about halfway across, and their car got to skidding a good deal, lurched suddenly into the ditch and tipped to its side. Amos saved himself by jumping, and Saunders by good luck, but the fat dispenser of sudden wealth got a broken leg and severe bruises. Amos pulled him out of the drift and discovered the extent of his injuries.

"Perhaps you'll have the kindness to go for a wagon," groaned the maker of mental millionaires.

"Kindness!" Amos exclaimed. "Beg yer pardon, sir, did you say kindness?"

"I asked you to get a wagon."

"An I say that you've gone an' done a fool thing," said Amos.

"What do you mean?"

"Why, no strict business man like you has any right to git into trouble."

"I don't understand you, sir."

"Don't you see that all of a sudden you've gone out o' business an' are beggin' fer kindness?"

"Not at all. It's a simple matter of business. I expect to pay for what you do for me."

"All right; what's yer proposition?"

"Get me to a doctor, and I'll pay you for your trouble."

"Not until we've made a bargain. If it's jest a business matter, I cocollate our time an' trouble is worth all we can get for it. The price will be reg'lated by supply an' demand.'

"Common decency should make you reasonable and fair to an injured man."

"That's so, but we've agreed to give up common decency an' stick to common business—you an' me. You've broke the fynancial legs of a lot o' poor fellers an' left 'em groanin' in the ditch. When they asked ye to show 'em mercy, you said that you never did business in that way. Now, you're in need o' mercy, an' if you git any from me you'll pay for it."

"Well, what do you want me to pay you?"

"A thousand dollars in notes."

"It's criminal extortion! I won't do it."

"Then lay here an' commune with yer conscience," said Amos, as he and Saunders turned to go. "I don't believe you'll git any one in this part o' the country to move ye for any less. I ought to have asked ye for all o' the notes, but I don't want to be too graspin'."

"But, my dear sir, those notes are good as gold," Foot whined.

"An' they didn't cost you anything but five cents' worth o' paper an' colored ink. So you're really givin' me about five cents for my labor."

"You misjudge me. The stock is very valuable; it is worth much more than the notes."

"Then you ought to be glad to keep the stock an' give me the notes," said Amos.

Mr. Foot was in no position to resist this argument and gave up the notes. Amos made him as comfortable as he could. They could do nothing with the car, and he and Saunders went for a wagon.

When at last they arrived at the Wilderness Inn with the mine owner, he was in great distress.

"Now," said Amos, "if you'll give me the rest o' them notes I'll see that you have a doctor right away. You'll be gittin' his services awful cheap."

GOING OUT INTO THE BY-WAYS

THE unadulterated Gospel is the same lifegiving stream that satisfied the five thousand men besides women and children who received it fresh from the inspired apostles on the day of Pentecost. Men to-day are thirsting still and do not know for what, until they hear the Gospel message in its simple truth.

Men and women often take more kindly and more seriously to preaching of the Gospel in familiar secular surroundings. The army of workers in a factory will scatter to their homes on Saturday night and individually, if at all, will hear the word preached on Sunday. It is not easy to carry into effect on the succeeding days whatever of divine impulse may have come at the Sunday service. There is a self-consciousness due to isolation in the new experience, which is not felt when the Word has been listened to in the company of one's fellow workmen. The influence of the message is then more widely felt, and if here and there a man or a woman shows a disposition to change his life, his fellows are more apt to be sympathetic; and he is very likely to find that he has companions in his new life. For these reasons, among others, evangelistic meetings held in shops and factories and institutions are among the most effectual forms of missionary work. The field for such endeavor is practically unlimited. It is an excellent one for churches to cultivate in their localities and to cultivate wisely and well. Approached with tact, almost any proprietor of a large establishment, as well as the employees, will welcome services of this character held at reasonable hours and with a due regard for the religious convictions of all classes. The splendid results obtained by evangelistic committees of our larger cities in organized work along these lines is encouraging the formation of such committees in smaller communities, preferably under the united auspices of all the local evangelical churches.

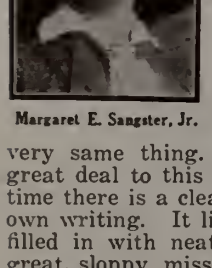
EVANGELISTIC MEETING IN A CALGARY, ALBERTA, MILL

Such meetings are increasing in number, and in proportion as the speakers and singers in charge give a simple, straightforward Gospel message will just such meetings increase in popularity.

In a former number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD appeared a photograph of a Coney Island meeting addressed by Rev. John E. Brown of Brooklyn. Interest was awakened in Canada by this photograph, and Mr. Brown was invited to Canada to do special evangelistic work. This was several winters ago, and he has conducted meetings there every winter since, one being held in the mill of Hon. W. H. Cushing.

THE BOOK OF LIFE

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.



Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

AND now comes the New Year — the unspoiled, fresh New Year. So we turn the pages in the book of life and write 1914 on a clean, white sheet. For every one has a book—a book that holds the tragedies and laughter, love and triumph and death. And though some of the little volumes are battered and thin, and some are fat and comfortable, they all represent the very same thing. And the New Year means a great deal to this little book. For always at that time there is a clean space to be covered with your own writing. It lies with you whether the page is filled in with neat, happy-looking script, or with great, sloppy, misshapen blots.

Not long ago New Year's was distinguished from other days as a time of mighty (and sometimes unholy) revelings. Crowds laughed and threw confetti, and drank, as the old year crept to its last sleep. But that is changed now. For I saw an article in the paper this morning that told of a new custom as unique as it is beautiful. One hundred thousand people are going to gather together and sing hymns of praise as the New Year steps in and ascends the throne. The contrast is very beautiful to me. It seems a fitting subject to jot down in our book of life.

Kipling says somewhere, in a parody of Omar Khayyam:

Now the new year, reviving last year's debt.

Of course the poet is speaking about politics—English politics—but I think that we might almost adopt the lines to our own lives—don't you? For if we have lived a happy, sweet life—a life that we are almost proud of—does not each New Year revive last year's debt, the debt to our hearts and souls, and, above all, to our characters?

Shall we put this down in our life's book?

Do you remember, older girls, the New Year's calls that people used to make? How the crowds came—walking and riding and jingling along behind sleigh bells? How they walked in out of the frosty air and gave their good wishes and sang and ate New Year's cake? Do you remember? Somehow, the custom has died out—a slow, torturing death. People do not think, in the rush of busy years, much about the graceful little courtesies of a generation gone by. They are too busy.

But, girls, we who are writing in the book of life have time and thought to spend on the wishing of health and wealth and happiness to others during the New Year. We are going to put it down on the cleanest, whitest page of all.

And then come the New Year's resolutions, spelled in capitals like this: RESOLUTIONS. For the making (and the keeping) of them is perhaps the most important thing in the New Year.

I remember when I first learned to print large, scrawly letters, and when I used to make these letters into words. Needless to say, I was rather young. It was then that a dear little lady gave me a red leather diary for a Christmas present. I was delighted with the gift and immediately began to write in it. First of all I printed my name: Margaret E. Sangster, Jr., and in red ink I added, "Her book—strickly privat." Then I began the chronicle of my rather uneventful life; the regular things that every girl kiddie puts in her first journal. There were tiny verses that were sloppy as the rhythm, and tiny jokes that were absolutely pointless, and tiny anecdotes that ran like this:

"It did raine to-day ,and I got water on my best ribon;" or, "My dollie fell off a chair and brok her nos;" or, "I skinned my face on the stairs. I fel of as I slided down." These were the entries that I made in my diary for the first week. Then New Year came in and I decided that I would write some resolutions.

Tiny kiddies never have many faults to correct by way of promises and pledges. Luckily I had a good imagination. My character might have been envied by a desperate criminal (if he could have read the things I resolved not to do). My resolutions covered many pages, and represented a large amount of thought.

It was at this time that the lady appeared—the lady who had given me the book. Humorously she looked at me from behind her sparkling bright glasses:

"What are you doing, honey?" she questioned.

Proudly I lifted my nearly full-moon face:

"Writing New Year's resolutions," I told her gravely.

The lady's face crinkled up into a dimply smile. Then she lifted me to her lap and reached for the book. She did not smile as she read it, for she knew the embarrassment of my soul and she understood small girls. Then, after she had finished, she looked at me almost gravely.

"Dear me!" she exclaimed. "What a girl! Why, honey, you have enough resolutions made to last for Methusaleh's lifetime—and you only seven!"

"But"—I confess that I was rather annoyed—"but these are all good resolutions. An' I shall keep them all!"

My lady smiled—the dimply smile was a habit with her, and then she told me this story:

"Once upon a time," she said, "there was a man. He was a good man—and a brave man, but he never talked about it, or made egotistical resolves. He lived his life as it came along, singing his soul into the hearts of people through his verses, and creeping up into their souls with his stories. But this man, with all his goodness, had a trouble. He was delicate and weak and nearly helpless—and the trouble grew larger until doctors sent him away from home—to die on an island in the South Seas. Most people," she looked at me slyly, "with books full of resolutions would have given up and died. But the man kept on singing and smiling, only this time he sang his way into the souls of brown-skinned natives. And because the natives adored him they cut a road out of the rough ground that his carriage might pass smoothly. They called it 'The Road of the Loving Heart.' . . . Not long after, the man died, but the road—his road—is still there. It is doing more good than a book of high-sounding sentences that he might have written."

I never wrote any more resolutions. But perhaps my baby mind whispered a prayer—a prayer that asked for a loving heart. Perhaps, friends of mine, that is a good topic to jot down on the new page of the life book.

Girls, dear, this book of our lives is standing open—now. What do you care if the old pages are mussed up, or even if the ink-bottle spilled over some of them? There is a new page—a white, untouched sheet waiting for the scratch of your pen.

"JESUS IS HERE!"

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

The Author of "In His Steps," Etc., Etc.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

Heralded by a marvelous light in the sky, which was seen by many, Jesus has come to Raymond, the scene of the story In His Steps. Popular excitement runs high, and extends throughout the country, skepticism being uppermost. Jasper Carter, editor of the Raymond Gazette, fails in an astonishing way to get either a sensational story or a photograph, as do also the other newspaper men, who come from other cities. Carter's star reporter, Barnes, accepts the reality of Jesus, and has a serious break with his employer. Jesus calls to see the editor, and leaves with him a remarkable manuscript. Jesus comforts Mrs. Page, whose little daughter dies, but does not bring the child back to life. He addresses an audience in First Church, an audience at the State university and again a great audience at the church. Virginia Page and Mr. Stanton, assistant to Mr. Maxwell, the pastor of First Church, have been strongly attracted to each other. In a riot of the crowd near the church Stanton protects Virginia from harm. Jesus appears on the church steps and quiets the mob. Some days later he leaves Raymond for the East. Virginia and Stanton announce their engagement. In the Gazette office Barnes and Carter are discussing the personality of Jesus when despatches arrive announcing the appearance of Jesus in New York and describing a remarkable conference he held with the clergy. Carter soon after leaves Raymond to attend a convention at New York. Virginia and Stanton are married, and go East for their wedding journey. In New York they find themselves in a dense crowd near the Subtreasury Building, and see Jesus standing beside the statue of Washington, in his arms a little girl grasping a wreath of artificial flowers. Jesus speaks to the multitude, his words searching out the sore spots in industrialism. A startling conviction seizes one man, who rushes up to Jesus. Jesus leads him away. The newspapers now accept Jesus. The Stantons visit him in lodgings amid sordid surroundings, and witness the beginning of a trying scene, of which they write.

Continuation of the Letter of Mrs. Richard Stanton

"THEN the drunkard turned as if in fury towards that part of the room, and my heart sank in fear and amazement as I saw him fling the chair at the helpless child and then stumble over towards her, while Jesus stood there silent, calm, motionless. He who had driven the traders out of the temple, he who had stilled the angry waters, he who had braved the soldiers sent to arrest him so that in fear they all fell backward, was standing there allowing this drunken brute to harm, perhaps to kill, this little helpless child for whom he had pleaded that day.

"It was incredible! I could not believe it.

"The drunkard kicked the child twice. She screamed and covered her face with her hands. The sick woman in the other room came running in, and fell down in front of the child kneeling and holding up beseeching hands to the drunken father. And still Jesus stood silent and motionless, and my heart almost stopped in its fear and trouble, and I noted Richard's powerful fist knotted and tense, as his look besought the Master for permission to throw the brute out of the room; and still Jesus made no sign.

"The man struck the woman a cruel blow across the face and a red welt sprang up and a stream of blood began to trickle over the woman's cheek. He raised his arm again as the woman sank fainting at his feet. I felt I could bear no more, when suddenly the man Clay Ross arose, knocking over his chair as he got up.

"With one stride he was on the drunken man, and the blow the latter aimed at the woman fell on Ross's own head. He seized the man, pinioning his arms to his side, and with much exertion, as if his physical strength were not great, he managed to drag the drunkard across the floor, back from the woman. The man resisted with drunken fury. But as the two struggled, trampling over the boxes which now were scattered all about the room, the drunken man stumbled over something, loosening the other's hold, and fell heavily.

"Clay Ross wiped the sweat from his face, looked around as if dazed and confused, and then went over, picked up the chair he had overturned, and, sitting down, put his elbows on the table and sobbed like a child.

"Then Jesus raised the sick woman, and, with my help and Richard's, carried her back into the other room and laid her down on her mattress.

"And now, Rachel, you will have to take this next statement just as I have to make it, and believe me to be describing exactly what I saw.

"We know that Jesus did not save Eloise when she was ill, and did not exercise his power to bring her to life. And we know your heart is satisfied that he did the best for you.

"But as we laid the woman down, apparently lifeless—although I could not say she was—I saw Jesus bend over her and whisper something. With a look of compassion that not even an angel of heaven could equal, he seemed to be asking this beaten, brutalized mother and wife a question. Was it a question that his whisper carried across that mysterious silence which Death creates for all of us? I do not know. But I do know what I saw.

"Jesus wiped the blood from her face. He put his hand on her head. She smiled, then opened her eyes and sighed. Then she looked calmly and gladly at Jesus, and I saw her raise his hand to her lips.

"Then Jesus smiled, but lifted his finger as if in caution. The woman closed her eyes again, breathed like a tired child and fell asleep.

"We went out of the room, and I saw Jesus take the little girl, and sitting down by the couch he sang a soothing song.

"Such a song, Rachel! No one can ever copy that! But if the child was hurt she did not complain. She smiled up at Jesus and once raised her hand and caressed his face. And he smiled back and sang his song. Where had he learned it? Oh, Rachel, I feel afraid and astounded when I think of all these things.

"While all this was happening, the man Clay Ross had lifted up his head and was talking to Richard. Evidently Richard had spoken to him and told him a little about who we were and why we were present.

"As I sat down near them, I noticed that the workers on the wreaths and doll dresses were at work again, as if nothing had happened out of the ordinary for them.

"One of the men had gone over to where the drunken man still lay and dragged him, like a bag of old clothes, over into a corner, protesting all the time at the ruin and loss occasioned by the breaking of the paper boxes and the destruction of the material.

"But when I had come over to Richard, I was fascinated by what Clay Ross was saying.

"Clay Ross! Do you recognize, Rachel, the name of one of New York's most noted promoters and contractors of labor?

"What was he saying? It was incredible, but the truest thing he ever said:

"'Mr. Stanton, this day marks a miracle in my life. When I went out into the street this afternoon to see and hear—Him, I had no other motive than idle curiosity, like every other broker and speculator there. But from the moment he began to speak, I knew in my heart that something great was going to happen to me. I have lived for forty-five years the regular life of a professional money-getter. Money has been my god. I am a type of hundreds and thousands in this town. I lived, ate, drank, dreamed, loved—money.

"'In among all my other schemes, I have for years been at the head of the contracting firms that supply the material used in nearly all the sweatshops and child labor contracts.

"'In addition to all the rest, I have all my life been one of those respectable rich men in New York who have believed in the brewery and the saloon, and I have always voted to license the saloon, saying what thousands of men in New York say, that it is here to stay and it is the only sensible thing to do, and so forth. I have always had liquor in my home and at my club, and I own heavy shares in brewing concerns, and all that.

"'You saw what happened to me to-day?' If I were to talk all night, it would not add to what you see and I feel.

"'For the first time in my life I am living. Jesus is my Redeemer. I know my sins are forgiven. I have been a very wicked, selfish, sinful man. In New York money circles I have passed for a good financier, a successful business man, a respected citizen. In reality, as Jesus laid bare my life as he talked, I am convinced of being a man guilty of nearly every crime against my brothers and sisters, and against my own life.

"'I would die for him. When he put his arm around me there to-day, I felt ready to follow him to the end of the world. I understand now how a man would leave his business as Matthew did and follow him.

"'I was never happy before—never knew what real happiness was. Now I know. If he will tell me how, I will give the rest of my life to humanity.

"'Do you know why he stood there a few minutes ago and looked on while that drunken brute beat up his family? It was to let me see and feel the horror of the thing I have all my life been so "respectably" defending. And when I got up and put my hands on that drunken representative of the wealthy brewer, I did the first real thing in all my life that sprang out of an honest personal conviction.

"'Friends' (and he said it in a tone I cannot convey), 'I am a new man in Christ Jesus. Once I was blind. Now I see. I will follow him whithersoever he leads me.'

"Before we came away from that place, Jesus frankly and with perfect comradeship revealed to us his plans.

"He will stay in New York some time. He will appear again to the ministers and encourage and help them. He will bring his message and his helpfulness to many places. He will strengthen the faith of his disciples.

"And then he plans to go to Washington. And then—you remember the United Congress of World Christianity is to gather here in New York next fall. He will be here then! What more fitting than that he of all persons should be present and speak as never man spake?

"Great events are coming. How wonderful that we should be privileged to live at a time like this! Now I understand what it must have meant to him who wrote that he testified of what he had 'seen and heard.'

"Richard and I have 'seen and heard' Jesus, and our hearts are aglow. Our picture of him as we last saw him there last night is this:

"He spoke to us as he sat there holding the child, blessing our human love for each other, speaking with such whole-hearted affection for us that we could not help weeping for joy as he spoke. And then he raised his hand in benediction over us and the child, and over the sordid room, full of dirty, sinful, common humanity, letting his hand fall with a gesture that even included the drunken wretch on the floor; and we understood as we stumbled down the filthy stairs a little of his reason for living there; we caught some glimpse, a little, perhaps, of his divine sharing with human suffering, and we came away with our hearts throbbing at the thought of his human affection. I wonder, Rachel, if we shall ever see him again! We must start for Raymond to-morrow, as our little vacation is over. But if we do not, nothing can ever take from us the blessed experience of our personal meeting with him. It is woven into our very heart history, it is a part of our eternal love for each other.

"Your sister in Christ,
"VIRGINIA STANTON."

By the time Stanton and Virginia had reached Raymond the whole world was talking and reading about Jesus and his appearances. In New York there was not even a hint of any doubt as to his personality or power. But the general public was in a constant fever of expectation, wondering at his next appearance and daily asking one another questions concerning him.

The churches and ministers were electrified by his coming. Never had there been such powerful preaching as since the time of his first message. Pulpit and pew demanded in his name that tremendous evils like the saloon be removed from the life of the city. Day by day the agitation grew for a more brotherly rule of financial life. The very spirit of the Master seemed to be on the streets, and men's hearts throbbed with new passion with every dawn, as they awoke and said to themselves, "Jesus is here!"

The friends in Raymond were in some ways even more excited over it all than the people in the big city. They had already felt the touch of his life, and they followed every movement of his plans through the New York press. So it was with no ordinary curiosity that Mr. Maxwell opened his New York newspaper four days after Stanton's return and read the following, written evidently at white heat by an eye witness of an event that followed closely on the Wall Street incident, about which, according to the writer, men were still talking with no abatement of interest and wonder.

Mr. Maxwell read aloud to Stanton and Virginia and Rachel and Rollin, who had stepped into the study that morning to talk over Rectangle matters:

"The appearances of Jesus in the city have been without a parallel in history, except possibly his own. There is no question he is what he claims to be. Since the place in the East Side tenement where he has been staying has been discovered, he has come into the city and is openly and boldly working and preaching in the churches.

"He has created even in this short time the most intense and enthusiastic devotion among the ministers and

SENDING OUT THE GOSPEL MESSAGE*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

THE sending out of the seventy by Jesus was the first lay missionary movement connected with Christianity. Jesus had before sent his apostles out two by two into Galilee on a special mission to the Jews, and he had given them power to cast out evil spirits and to heal all manner of diseases. (Matt. 10.) The "seventy" were not ordained helpers as the apostles were, but were devoted followers of Jesus, ready and waiting to do any service they could for him.

In Japan they have a curious way of discriminating between regular ministers and lay workers. They say: "In these days when the seekers are many and the workers few, the labor should not all be left to the pastor, but all believers should labor in the preaching of the Gospel, and so there must be sack-coat preachers as well as frock-coat preachers." The saying that the pastor is a frock-coat preacher and the layman a sack-coat preacher has great meaning couched in few words. "The sack-coat preacher should assist the pastor of his own church. In preaching and administration he can do much effectual work. He can also, in a broader sense, by his life and words, be a witness for Christ. Moreover, he can rise above a single church or denomination and become a leader in the Christian Church in a wide sense, thus doing effectual work for the church as a whole."

Perea being a mountainous district and pasture land, there were very few towns or cities, and the people were widely scattered in the care of their sheep. They were not the sort of people who went to the feasts at Jerusalem; probably few of them had ever seen the temple. The grim walls of Machærus, where John the Baptist was imprisoned for two years and then beheaded, were a more familiar sight to them.

Jesus sent the seventy out on a house-to-house visitation, saying to them, "Whatsoever house ye shall enter, first say, Peace be to this house." That was the Oriental way, and was understood as a prayer that the householder might be blessed in every respect. They did not go as beggars, but if food was offered to them they were to eat of it without faultfinding if it did not suit their taste. The giving of food to them was to be thought of not as charity but as courtesy and in appreciation of the errand upon which they had come. They were not to feel humiliated by receiving the free board and lodging, for said Jesus, "The laborer is worthy of his hire." And they were told that they must not go from house to house begging for food and a place to stay, but if, in the first instance, they were not received, it should be an omen to them that no works of healing should be done in that place, and they must proclaim in the streets the message of doom to those who reject the Gospel message, and then go on to the next place, for, said Jesus: "He that heareth you heareth me, and he that rejecteth you rejecteth me."

There are two modern aspects of the seventy sent forth. It is not two years since a "committee of ninety-seven" was formed to carry the Men and Religion Forward Movement into every part of the United States and Canada. All church brotherhoods and interdenominational men's societies and also the International Sunday School Association were enlisted.

Nothing could be more extensive than the plan. As to the results we cannot speak so positively. That is best known to God and the angels. If hopes were not fully realized all that can be said is: "He that heareth you heareth me, and he that rejecteth you rejecteth me, and he that rejecteth me rejecteth him that sent me."

GIVE US MEN

Give us men!
Men from every rank,
Fresh and free and frank;
Men of thought and reading,
Men of light and leading,
Men of loyal breeding,
The nation's welfare speeding;
Men of faith and not of faction,
Men of lofty aim in action.
Give us men—I say again,
Give us men!

Give us men!
Men whom highest hope inspires,
Men whom purest honor fires,
Men who trample self beneath them,
Men who make their country wreathe them
As her noble sons
Worthy of their sires!
Men who never shame their mothers,
Men who never fail their brothers,
True, however false are others.
Give us men, I say again—
Give us men!

. . . . . .

Men who tread where saints have trod,
Men for country, home and God!
Give us men! I say again, again—
Give us men!

—Bishop of Exeter.

House-to-house visitation, which is one of the newest departments of the International Sunday School Association, is largely based on the statement of W. N. Hartshorn that "it is the whole duty of the Sunday school and the duty of the whole Sunday school to give the whole Gospel to the whole world as speedily as possible." This means that 28,011,194 men, women and children have received the commission to do it. And some of them are doing it. Kentucky, Colorado, Texas and Louisiana reported Statewide visitations. Some of the leading cities in the United States had a visitation day, viz.: Chicago, Denver, New Orleans, Cleveland, Minneapolis, Louisville, Syracuse, Fargo, Mobile, Wheeling, Oklahoma City, Milwaukee, Dallas, Spokane, and Toronto in Canada.

The records indicate that a few more than eight hundred thousand people were visited in Chicago and its suburbs on the afternoon of the Great Visitation. Some visitors, unable to complete their sections the first afternoon, did so the following day, while others in wards where there were the fewest visitors continued in the work as their time would permit until two million people were visited. More than a million people, who were not connected with any Sunday school or church, were placed in touch with the Sunday school and church of their choice; and records of some 40,500 church letters not in any local church were secured and given to churches preferred. Home visitation work is as practicable for our great country districts as for cities and towns. Kentucky, Oklahoma, Ontario, North Carolina and Michigan are among the associations in which great things have been done in rural communities. —Extract from Report of Superintendent of the Visitation Department.

These statements should encourage everybody everywhere to enter upon this sort of work, with the assurance that it is just what Jesus would have them do to carry out the Gospel plan.

It is recorded that the seventy returned with great joy, saying, "Even the devils are subject unto us through thy name." And Jesus said unto them in gentle reproof, "Rejoice not that the spirits are subject unto you, but rejoice that your names are written in heaven." Not even success in winning souls should make one proud!

Because Jesus Christ gave to the twelve apostles, when he sent them out two by two, power to heal all manner of diseases, and because he gave the same power to the seventy, we should see the wisdom of those who make such missions their lifework, interesting themselves in methods of relieving pain. It is God's way, and he will bless the means. Hon. Dean C. Worcester, former Secretary of State in the Philippines, once said to us: "I make a yearly visit among the hill tribes. I believe if a medical missionary would first do something to relieve their sufferings they would gladly listen to the preaching."

He also said that it was his custom to carry a few remedies with him, but he could do nothing with cases that needed surgical treatment. Then he told of a man who had come to him in his latest visit there with a piece of bamboo in his foot which was giving him terrible pain. "I did not know enough about anatomy to cut the bamboo out of his foot, so I told him that the next time I came I would bring a doctor with me. But the chances are the man will be dead before that time."

Let those who are thinking of becoming foreign missionaries give this matter particular attention.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

YOU HAVE SAID a good deal about helping boys of the "teen age." What can you tell us about helping girls of that age?—R. E. P.

Here is a beautiful story about how some girls helped themselves. There was a conference of girls from fifteen to twenty years of age recently held in Birmingham, Ala. It is told that "the purpose of it all was to combine their energies, develop their talent for leadership and study ways and means of training themselves for duties already undertaken." Verily they were wearing old heads on young shoulders! Three hundred and ninety-seven girls registered and each one had been selected as a delegate by the school to which she belonged; all denominations were represented. The girls made the plans for the meeting themselves, and decorated the church attractively. Only delegates were allowed to take part; parents, teachers and others were seated in the galleries as listeners. As to results: a permanent council was formed; it was decided to organize "teen age" classes in their own and neighboring churches with "one hundred new ones" as a slogan. At least half of the girls wrote upon cards what they wanted to do in church work, signing their names, and giving their addresses. Some said they wished to teach the young children in the Sunday school, others begged for a chance to help girls of their own age; five volunteered to go as foreign missionaries. We believe this Birmingham plan will work in other cities and towns as well. Organization is a great force, particularly when the young people organize themselves. They like to do things, and do them in their own way. Encourage them to do it that way.

"It's highway robbery!" Foot yelled, and so loudly that he was heard from the bridge to the post office.

"But we're goin' to give you all the stock, so you'll be makin' money by the operation," said Amos in a comforting tone.

Foot shouted for help, but none came to him, and after a brief delay he gave up the notes with unmistakable anger. The stock was worth much more, he said, but he hated to do business in that way.

So, after Amos had amputated the profits of the mine owner, the doctor came and set his bones.

Foot said that his wife was in poor health and that he could not think of sending for her.

"Get a nurse and I'll pay the bill," he commanded with the tone of a millionaire.

At the end of a week, however, he had not money enough to pay her wages, but said that he expected a remittance.

Again this great business man was looking for kindness, although quite unconsciously.

Amos discharged the nurse. He and Sol Plum and Billy Parsons and the landlord of the inn took turns in the nursing, night and day, for more than a month. One day, when Foot was able to get out of bed, he said to Amos:

"Give me a bill for all that you and the boys have done, and when I get home I'll send you the money."

"No, you won't," said Amos.

"Why not?"

"Because our kindness is free, an' we don't intend to let it git mixed up with any more o' your business."

Foot was taken by surprise.

"We've been pretty mean to ye, but we had to be," Amos went on. "You started in to give us lessons in business an' found us tol'able easy to learn. You've learnt one thing yourself, which the same is, if ye're goin' t' be a strict business man ye mustn't let nothin' happen to ye. In partic'lar, ye ought never to expose yerself to autymobiles. I don't want ye to make no mistake. We wan't much in love with you when this started, but some of us has half changed our minds, an' we have made up a purse o' $50 to git ye back to Boston. You're a human bein', if ye be a scoundrel."

"I'm not so bad as I seem," Foot answered. "I've discovered a gold mine here that's better than any in Alaska. It's a well-managed and paying branch of the great human corporation. It has taken a fit of sickness to buy my stock in this company, and there's a balance due on it, Amos, and as soon as possible I shall send you the money."

"Wal," said Amos, after a pause, some of the members o' the local branch o' that corp'rashon was talkin' t' me one day 'bout the flavor o' turkeys, and as ye seem t' be in a mind t' eat some with a taste that's fire bran' new to ye, ye better stay over to-morrow and eat it under my roof. My wife's got one she's been feedin' special fer New Year's dinner."

And Foot stayed and ate, and went and kept his word, and in Blueberry Lake they often refer to him as "the man with a pedigree."

"JESUS IS HERE!"

churches. All denominations are flocking around him. It seems probable that a new chapter in interchurch union will result from his presence, and a working plan grow out of his counsel that will tremendously increase the power and influence of his disciples.

"His preaching is indescribable in its beauty, its power, its persuasiveness, its appeal, its singular simplicity, its captivating charm. All ages, classes, parties, nationalities, feel its winsomeness. He does not scourge the church nor call attention to its weaknesses. He speaks with transcendent power of its mighty history, its unparalleled achievements, its sacrificial martyrdoms. The effect is irresistible. There is no question he is giving the church and the ministry such a marvelous vision of their opportunities that they are preparing to enact again the triumphs of the great centuries of Christian conquest. What the results will be for Christianity no one can predict; but it is safe to say they will be something remarkable.

"He is a tireless worker and speaker. With all, he is the calmest and most serene public person the people have ever known.

"Those who are nearest to him say that at the close of his day's ministrations he appears exhausted and sleeps the deep and dreamless sleep of childhood.

"Every one of his appearances is the scene of tremendous demonstrations. Whenever he is recognized on the streets or at public gatherings and the people begin to say 'Jesus is here!' he is the center of instant attention and attraction. There are times, however, when he seems to move unnoticed among the people, like any average man.

"His voice is of matchless volume and glorious in its reach of tone, and his smile is marvelous in its attractiveness.

"No one has yet satisfactorily described his appearance."

Mr. Maxwell paused and looked up. His listeners returned his look.

"The same as when he was here," said Mr. Maxwell.

"At the same time," Virginia spoke eagerly, "we shall never forget how he looks."

"To the end of the world," said Stanton gravely.

WASHINGTON'S NEW DIPLOMATIC CORPS

Washington became the eleventh of the highest ranking diplomatic stations at our capital.

There are now forty nations of the globe which maintain diplomatic posts at Washington. Eleven of these, and that includes Spain, are of the highest, that is, ambassadorial, rank, and the others are of ministerial rank. Diplomatic precedence is a very serious matter in the corps, and is followed with extreme rigidity. The ambassador, or the minister, ranks according to the length of his service at the post at which he is stationed, and hence the dean of the corps is always the ambassador who has held his position longest. The French ambassador at Washington is the dean of the corps and has served there since February, 1903. The German ambassador, Count Bernstorff, the courtly representative of the emperor, ranks next, although his service at Washington only reaches back to December, 1908. Then comes the Turkish mission, which was created an embassy in June, 1910, and it is followed successively by the Italian, the Brazilian, the Russian, the Japanese, the Mexican, the Austro-Hungarian, the British, and when the Spanish ambassador has presented his credentials to President Wilson, Spain will take its place as the eleventh country represented by highest diplomatic rank at Washington.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

How to Pray*

PURPOSE, Persistency and Power! Sometimes when people try to manufacture a striking phrase like that they sacrifice meaning to sound. They look for words all beginning with the same letter rather than words which express precisely the meaning desired. But in this case the words not only have the alliteration but the meaning. This is the way to pray—with Purpose, Persistency and Power!

What is your purpose when you pray? Many prayers are unanswered because they are not prompted by a right purpose. It is to be feared that the majority of prayers are really selfish. Something hurts us and we ask to be relieved from it; we want something and we ask God to give it to us. Now, such prayers are perfectly legitimate; God wants us to make these requests just as a kind father wants his child to talk freely about the things he wants. But we must remember that often God cannot give us what we want without taking it away from somebody else; and, of course, he must love that other person just as much as he loves us.

So what we need to get is God's own point of view; we must try to understand his purpose, and then, as his grace more and more fills our hearts and we keep on loving him better and loving others more unselfishly, our purpose will come to be identical with his. We shall desire things not, first of all, because we want them, but because some one wants or needs them, and because we think God would like to do certain things for and with them. The great secret of having the right purpose in prayer is to get better acquainted with Christ. As he cleanses our hearts from sin, and draws us into closer fellowship with himself, we come to love him more ardently and want his wishes carried out. This is what it means to pray in the name of Christ. We want his name honored, his purposes fulfilled.

Now, persistency. Many people ask for a thing once, and, because it is not granted or accomplished immediately, give up. The fact that God does not answer our prayers at once by no means indicates that he is not willing or even eager to answer them. We might ask him for a lily, but it takes some time for such a prayer to be answered. We must wait till God, by his wonderful processes, gets the lily ready for us. And in working out many of his purposes it is part of his plan that his people should keep on praying about them. If they fail to do so, the whole matter may in some mysterious way be hindered and delayed.

Then power! How do we get power in prayer? There are two secrets here. The first is that we must have the Holy Spirit himself to help us pray. This aid is definitely promised, and the people who are mighty in prayer are those who accept the infinite gift of God's Spirit to come and take complete possession of mind and soul. The other requirement is faith. We must form the habit of trusting God. We must expect him to guide our steps and our thoughts, to tell us what to pray for and to give us power in prayer. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even your faith." Faith is expecting that God will do what he has said he will do; that he will do the kindest, most reasonable, most just thing. Faith is, after all, putting our own desires and confidences out of the way and gladly trusting everything to God. After all, it is his power that will bring the right and beautiful things to pass, and the life of faith is the life that is so "hid with Christ in God" that he can, every hour of every day, use us to carry out his divine plans.

* "PURPOSE, PERSISTENCY, AND POWER IN PRAYER." Matt. 7: 7-11. Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic for Sunday, January 11, 1913.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

"A PRAYER that I almost thought impossible has been answered," writes H. J. G., from Brooklyn, N. Y. God said long ago: "Is anything too hard for the Lord?" Surely, he still likes to have us trust him for the things that are especially difficult.

A. J., of Wentworth, Ont., acknowledges God's goodness in restoring to health her daughter and herself when they were so ill that the doctors had little hope of their recovery. A friend from Tompkinsville, N. Y., writes that God has "gloriously answered" her prayers recently in a time of great distress.

A. C. G., of Santa Barbara, Cal., writes: "I want to give my testimony to the kindness of our dear heavenly Father in a direct answer to prayer, whereby financial trouble was averted; also a direct answer to prayer for my sister."

Often grown-ups are put to shame by the faith of little children. Mrs. W. writes from Bristol, Tenn.: "One evening my husband said to me at supper: 'I will not be home to-night, as the doctor says Brother Martin cannot live through the night.' Our little two-year-old son looked up and said: 'Papa, Untle Mart isn't doin' to die, 'tos I asked Dod not to let him.' Sure enough, he recovered and lived ten or twelve years." Mrs. F. M., of Seattle, Wash., writes: "I want to acknowledge God's wonderful answers to prayers during the past year, two in particular: in saving property that was about to be taken from us wrongfully, and in providing employment for my husband after an illness, when things looked very dark."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from: J. S. M., Washington, D. C.; W. M. E., Maxwell, Neb.; A Reader, Highland, Ill.; Mrs. E. S., Akron, Ohio; Mrs. M. B., Roswell, N. M.

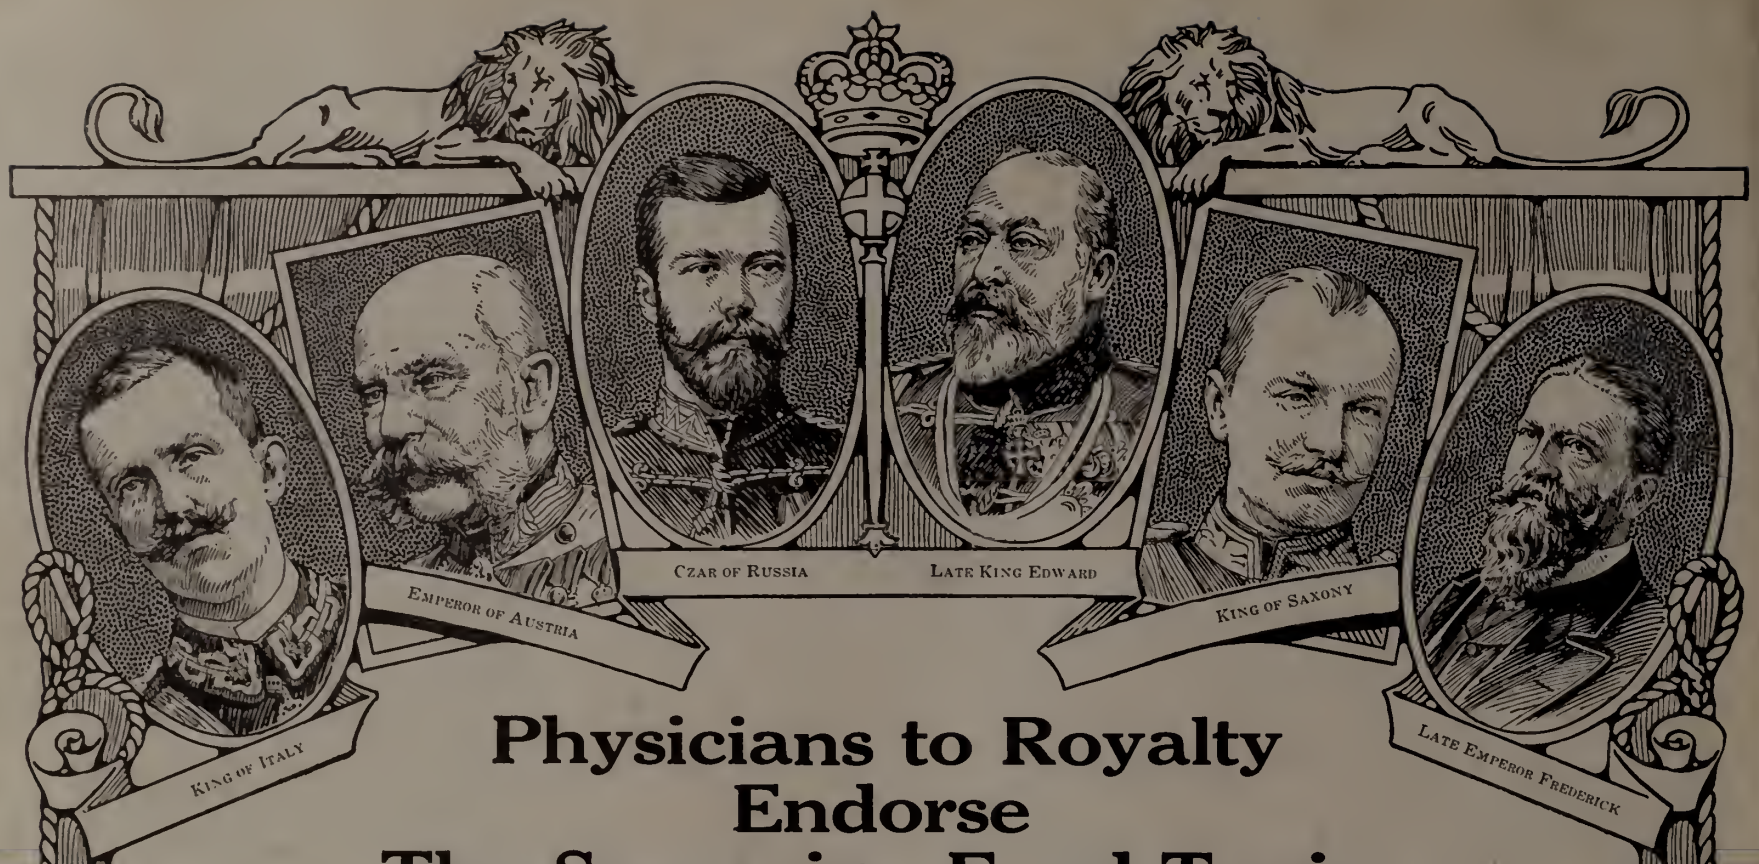
Among the Workers

—THE YOKEFELLOWS BAND, an organization connected with the Y. M. C. A., is doing good work among employees of cotton mills in Greenville, S. C. Just now the band is trying to raise funds for an industrial school for poor girls and boys of the community.

—MR. D. A. SILLIMAN, of 115 West Sixtieth Street, New York, reports that he can make use of copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in his work among the colored people of that neighborhood. He suggests that some of our readers might be glad to mail him copies of the paper after they have finished reading them. He specifies, however, that the copies be "clean," that is, not read to pieces.

—EVANGELISTS HART AND MAGANN of Madison, Wis., recently conducted a union tabernacle campaign with the churches of Caro, Mich., in which there were many conversions and an awakening throughout the entire county. Card-playing was one of the greatest pastimes and hindrances to the churches of that city, yet the influence of the meetings was such as to create a great opposition and make it unpopular in the future. On the closing night of the meeting there were over one hundred conversions, many of them leading merchants and farmers of the community and several men over seventy years of age. From Caro the evangelists went to take the leadership of a great union tabernacle campaign at Paris, Ill., in which nine churches co-operated.

—A POOR NATIVE pastor in Moka, Tochigiken, Japan, writes: "I am a pastor in this town in Japan, and have been doing the Lord's work here and there to win souls to Christ. But it is very hard because the people are not so religious as in other parts of Japan. Please pray for the perishing souls and the church. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been sent from my very faithful friend, Mr. Sano, who is now in your country, and I have been praying that I might continue to receive and read your magazine every week by sending you the subscription; but unfortunately I am not able to pay the money because the lives of local pastors in Japan are not generally affluent. So it is a very hard thing to get any books or magazines. Will you not kindly appeal to your friends to give the subscription of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for me?" We commend this poor Japanese pastor's appeal to our readers, among whom some one may be found who would be pleased to grant his request, and to receive a letter from him occasionally. We have similar applications from white and native pastors in other missionary lands, and also from poor white and colored preachers in our own Southern States. We will gladly fill subscriptions for these worthy workers at the special rate of $1 for American subscribers and $1.50 (includes postage) for foreign subscribers.



Physicians to Royalty Endorse The Sovereign Food Tonic

HEALTH of the monarch is of national—even universal—importance. His care is one of the nation's heaviest responsibilities. His medical advisor is always a man of highest scientific attainments and strictest integrity, who endorses only those preparations which beyond a shadow of doubt are safe and beneficial.

Here is the written opinion of the physicians to six of Europe's most influential rulers upon that wonderful brain and body revitalizer—

Sanatogen
THE FOOD-TONIC

These eminent authorities endorse Sanatogen because their investigations have satisfied them that it is the scientific and worthy preparation for tired, worn-out nerves and debilitated, over-worked bodies—a wonderful source of strength and endurance. And their endorsement but voices the sentiments of more than 18,000 practicing physicians the world over. Such proof must be conclusive that Sanatogen is the logical food-tonic for you.

Late King Edward's Physician

Dr. Ernest Ott, Marienbad:

"I have been using Sanatogen for a number of years in my practice with excellent results. These results have been notably good in the case of elderly people when it was desirable to build up the strength, to stimulate the bodily functions and to improve the circulation of the blood."

The Czar of Russia's Private Physician

Dr. Ferchmin:

"My daughter, who was very nervous and anæmic, has been greatly benefited by the prolonged use of Sanatogen. Her appetite improved, her weight increased and the color of her skin became healthier."

The King of Italy's Physician

Dr. G. Quirico:

"I have used Sanatogen with marked benefit in the case of weakly children, and in convalescence after long illnesses. I consider Sanatogen a most excellent tonic food."

The King of Saxony's Private Physician

Surgeon-General Prof. Dr. Tillmanns:

"I am, and shall always be, a great admirer of Sanatogen."

The Late Emperor Frederick's Private Physician

Professor Tobold, M.D.:

"My experience points to the fact that patients suffering from nervous exhaustion after influenza, a common occurrence, and who present the troublesome symptoms of neurasthenia, by using Sanatogen in a comparatively short time regain strength and vitality."
